125 – The Mentor Archetype

125/152: Caring and knowledgeable 1. This is the most thoughtful and reserved 1. This 1 is shy and reserved and can be mistaken for a 5, especially if a self-preserving subtype. Can also be a loner, moving towards others out of duty, then withdrawing. This 1 is very helpful, but may need a lot of alone time. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

251/215: Knowledgeable and discerning 2. This is the most procedural 2. This 2 requires systems and order, especially if a social subtype. Often introverted, this 2 likes to seek and share information on subjects that help one to improve. Can be mistaken for a 5 or 1. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

521/512: Discerning and caring 5. This 5 is focused on being responsible and helping others. Improvement-oriented, this 5 seeks knowledge to help others and make change. This is the friendly 5 with high ideals. Can be mistaken for a 1 or 2, especially if a social subtype. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, immutable, and inconsequential.

Gut: 1 Heart: 2 Head: 5

Communications skills

- 125s are the most people-oriented of the ONE + FIVE combinations, and thus like to provide their knowledge to others;

Fields of Interests

- 125s are interested in learning more about people and how to better connect and take care of them;

Social Roles

- 125s often take the role of an adviser and protector of people. They like to work with humans and understand their mechanisms.

Energy Manifestation

- 125s are the most intellectual-looking compared to 258 & 259 and the most likely willing to be actively helping people in a specific task by giving out detailed advice.

Anger Manifestation

- 125s really don't like to get angry because this makes them really out of character. They prefer to suck up the frustration until they can't take it anymore and bolt out of society to explode in private;

Anxiety Management

- 125s are more removed from their environment than the other two ONE + TWO combinations. They manage their anxiety stemming from not being competent enough by retreating into their private world and establishing barriers;

Primary Strengths

- 125s are good at identifying details and show people how to apply them into a coherent structure. They have very good observational skills and like to advise people on how to pay attention to little things in order to make satisfactory work;

Introversion vs Extraversion

- 125s are typically introverts, regardless of which enneatype is in the lead. They prefer to wait and observe their environment before leaping into action and provide useful information;

Advices Given

- 125s like to dispense elaborate and detailed information that can help people for solving very specific problems. They can dwell too long on some elaborate information at times;

Potential Problems

- 125s can be so attached to its own procedures and standards that they can come across as stubborn, demanding and intolerant. They can also become frustrated when helping people who have less stellar standards than theirs. Also, people can complain about the archetype's know-it-all and haughty tendencies, even if it's unintentional. Finally, they tend to over give their time and effort, then feel overwhelmed by all their commitments. They need to feel confident about the information they provide and control the amount of time they give to others in order to feel at ease with people;

Patterns & Structure

- 125s are triple details and advising. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to help people pay attention to finer details in a structured and methodical way. They're usually very knowledgeable and like to use said knowledge for the greater good. They can be very private and removed from their environment, and have some anxiety in finding the right time and space to provide what they know.

Self-preservation dominant versions of this archetype like to provide concrete tips and guidelines and can appear more anxious and introverted than the other two subtypes. They are very humble and don't usually like to drag on long conversations unless required.

Sexual 125s like to delve into deep thoughts and intellectual exchanges and may appear more emotional and possessive. They can also be less patient with other's incompetence and can be more pushy in their quest to seek intimacy and closeness.

Finally, social subtypes with this tritype are naturally more involved with groups and can often take the role of a professor or expert of some sort in any given setting. They like to be known for their incorruptible nature and judicious advices.

Interests:

- Helping others
- Learning
- Trying to fit in

Mission:

- Use knowledge to help others improve themselves

Blind spots:

- Overly focused on how things ought to be done
- Overly critical of others, distanced from others
- Other extreme: Invest too much, think of others too much instead of yourself

Fears:

- not being able to help others
- making mistakes

If you are a 125, you are very diligent, caring, and knowledgeable. You want to be ethical, helpful, and wise. You are very idealistic and see what needs to be done and the simple and effective ways to do it. Furthermore, you're intensely private but care about people. You seek practical systems and procedures to measure results and effectiveness. You can come across as particular at times, but you are always focused on improvement.

Your life mission is to use your wisdom to provide the information needed to manifest ideals that help those in need. A true mentor, you are happiest when you can help others improve themselves.

Your blind spot is that you can be so identified with your standards and procedures that you can fail to trust your heart and can appear to be overly judgmental, cold, and indifferent. You can also over-give and then feel overwhelmed.

5 + 1 has the perceptiveness and thoroughness of the type 5 mixed with the practicality and morality of type 1. It highlights the cerebral aspect of both types but with more objectivity and groundedness on account of the 1.

Mentors want to help others with the information they have acquired. They love being the stoic guidance counselor. Caring, practical, knowledgeable. They can be very controlling, & sometimes try to force advice on others, but it's typically very helpful. They have high expectations for others and push them to be their best. Furthermore, they should try to be less judgmental of others and not over-give. Your life mission is to use your wisdom to provide the information needed to manifest ideals that help those in need. A true mentor, you are happiest when you can help others improve themselves. They could make great teachers – they are precise, ethical, thorough, intellectual, disciplined, but also altruistic and willing to help other people. They are usually moral and righteous individuals, who have high ideals and are willing to stand by a cause they believe in. Their interest in people and commitment to knowledge and improvement can turn them into crusaders for theories and systems that can make the world a better place.

Triple details (2 is people details): surprisingly appropriate, education, getting it right, in-depth analysis, details about people.

The 125 is focused on helping others through their information, being a mentor and being of service. This is a scholar archetype. Caring, but practical and knowledgeable. The life mission is to manifest ideals that help people in need and the blind spot is an over-focus on procedure or protocol that gets in the way of being of true service to others

125- Reserved, studious, perfectionist, anxious about if they truly are a good person, possibly attracted to jobs such as being a teacher. Soft under a reserved exterior, expresses itself through practical yet caring questions. If someone's sick, "Did you take your medicine at the correct time?" Likely to have a tendency to withdraw under stress to gather more information about a problem (5), though 1 disintegrates to 4 so may act like a 4 as well. Cares for loved ones, may have a desire to connect to them, but difficulty initiating or enunciating it, so somewhere in between, wishing they could do more, but not sure how. Hyper aware of criticism to character, outwardly stoic. Generous, but wouldn't appear so. Usually independent, appreciates a helping hand in very desperate times very much though may not seem like the type, tries to remain objective and usually is but may sometimes be skewed by the 2 in the tritype, torn between standing back and observing and rushing forward and interacting

(2)-5-1 : The Competent 2

2-(5)-1 : The Compliant 5

2-5-(1) : The Power-Seeking 1

Very controlling and demanding, but also very helpful advisers. They feel they understand much of the world and how it should be. They try to help people by providing them advice; although their advice is sometimes unwanted. Likewise, they have high expectations of others, and may tend to push people to their limits.

5-1-2: Most orderly Five. Wants knowledge to make change. Often socially-focused. Friendly Five.

1-5-2: Scholar → more focused on learning from and helping other researchers

Other persistent tritypes are the 125, 145, 468. Aggression with tenacity or persistence makes one able to be relentless in their pursuits.

Tritype 5-1-2 most likely reaching out method--inquisitiveness, service.

Basically, I see the 1-2-5 as tipping things, in the heart triad, towards the sort of self-sacrificial idealism of 1—but at the cost of competency preoccupation which 3 brings. A warmer, maybe less scientific person, who will more readily throw science out the window for the sake of helping others. Both Twos and Threes have a kind of workaholism, but Threes work better alone, and I think the 1-3-5 is ultimately the more reclusive trifix combo. The scholar, the diligent student, the expert practitioner. Whereas 1-2-5 is more like the field doctor, medic, or veterinarian. Objective, but involved, and conscious of others. Possibly does a lot of detailed work on their own, but they see themselves moreover as being in service of others. In some ways, 1-2-5 is a more “balanced” trifix/tritype. 1-3-5 gets overloaded with competency issues and comes out becoming too rigid, too logical for humanitarian work—people seem too chaotic, 1-3-5's know their own abilities and studies best, so they stick with those. They aren't “by the book” but would rather write the book themselves. They suffer more from feeling that they lack the innate ability to help others, so they practice more, try to get ahead, prepare, theorize, get involved with projects that keep face-to-face interaction to a minimum, but want to get things just right. More perfectionist, more critical.

5+1: Focused, serious tone. Critical outlook. The theme of sacrifice; dissolves wholly into their projects. Special interest in knowledge, skill, and discoveries to improve health, society, the future, and the like. Concerned for others in the abstract; difficult to get close to.

2+5s: They're schemers at heart. They combine their intellectualism with their emotionality to create sure-fire strategies that are bound to end with them projecting a “positive” image. They learn as much as possible from their environment to understand its rules and regulations, so they can then proceed to accommodate their image to it and therefore “fit in”. This was the problem with Alice, as she could not understand her environment, thus her 5-fix had trouble. And because her 5-fix had trouble understanding, then her 2-type could not accommodate to the environment so easily. This led her to become frustrated and upset with her environment for not providing her coherent and consistent rules. The inconsistency of the rules and her natural tendency to accommodate the surrounding rules is what led her to become confused about her image.

1-2-5: These 1s are kind, helpful, and altruistic, but also a bit more introverted and reserved. They usually give to others without asking very much in return, mainly because they dislike receiving something from other people. They can have a vague push-pull dynamic to them: they can be very generous and involved with people, but they will as well demand time alone to rebuild their energy and sort out their thoughts. Likewise, they often have a wise appearance and enjoy learning and teaching things to others.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, social, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-5-2, 2-1-5

Flavors: dutiful, altruistic, considerate, and wise

1-5-2: This is an introverted, intellectual and rather altruistic 1, who desires to invest their efforts in building a better world for all. Although they're reserved and somewhat hard to get to know, they prefer to work for selfless, humanitarian purposes, and they are excellent teachers with lots of patience, knowledge and a wise kindness to them. The world of academia fits them well as they are erudite, idealistic, and they like people.

Typical subtypes: social, self-preserving, 1w9, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 5-1-2, 1-2-5

Flavors: wise, knowledgeable, scholarly, and kind

5-2-1: These Fives enjoy using their knowledge and expertise in the benefit of others and are typically attracted to humanitarian causes. They are more altruistic and generous than other Fives and also more social, involved and controlling. They want to help other people and usually do it by teaching them how to help themselves – they can make good teachers. However, they have some trouble with acknowledging their own problems and needs and tend to protect their inner world by focusing on others.

Typical subtypes: social, 5w6

Similar tritypes: 5-1-2, 2-5-1

Flavors: altruistic, social, devoted, and controlling

5-1-2: These Fives could make great teachers – they are precise, ethical, thorough, disciplined, but also altruistic and willing to help other people. They are usually moral and righteous individuals, who have high ideals and are willing to stand by a cause they believe in. Their interest in people and commitment to knowledge and improvement can turn them into crusaders for theories and systems that can make the world a better place, sometimes at the cost of their own physical and emotional needs.

Typical subtypes: social, 5w6

Similar tritypes: 5-2-1, 1-5-2

126 – The Supporter Archetype

126/162: Caring and inquisitive 1. This is the most dutiful and cooperative 1. If social, this 1 tends to be rigid in expectations of self and others. This 1 is the most regimented, 'by the book' 1 with very exacting standards. This 1 is good at managing quality control. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

261/216: Inquisitive and discerning 2. This 2 is the most dutiful, cooperative, and militant. This is the 1ish 2 that has a strong need to do what is right and can appear to be a 1 or a 6; especially if a social subtype. Has self-deprecating humor. May experience more anxiety. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

621/612: Discerning and caring 6. This 6 is often mistaken for a 1 or 2 as they are orderly and helpful. They seek a channel to direct their need to be helpful and supportive. They want structured ways to be of assistance and are typically the good Samaritan. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, immutable, and inconsequential.

Gut: 1 Heart: 2 Head: 6

Leadership Style

- 126s are more likely to be democratic and let other people take the lead at times. They also prefer to take the role of the adviser than the actual chief of operations;

Anxiety Management

- 126s ease their anxiety by comparing and adjusting to the current standards of their teammates and managers; they may also create relationships in order to reduce their fear of being unwanted and not enough;

- 126s are very devoted to their tasks and put their anxiety at ease by getting their goals met and by finding sure-fire ways to maintain harmony and structure in their environment. This tritype shows its anxiety the most out of the three ONE + TWO combinations;

Sensitivity

- 126s are sensitive to the relationships that they create and bond with because they serve a strong underlying need to be present for others and to be needed;

Primary Strengths

- 126s are great at putting aside their need in order to shift their concern into their duty. They are also very good at supporting people they see as important to them. They want to keep things balanced and running smoothly at all times;

Introversion vs Extraversion

- 126s are mostly extroverted in the sense that they prefer to be around people and support them whenever they look like they could use some assistance. Their help makes them feel useful and important;

Helping Nature

- 126s are very dutiful and responsible and expect others to at least listen to their advices because they've been generally working a great deal of time on them in order to present an accurate and satisfactory presentation. They are very hard on themselves if they make a mistake;

Communications Skills

- 126s like things to be as clear and correct as possible, and they reflect this principle in their communication style. They are generally patient with people and will reformulate their thoughts if others find them too unclear;

Anger Management

- 126s build up frustration over time as a way to avoid bouts of anger from people not listening or disregarding their input. If this attitude is persistent in time, this can bring a great deal of resentment and emotional breakdown if they can't keep their anger in check;

Potential Problems

- 126s forget their own needs and overfocus on other's. They can appear nosy, controlling and nagging because of their overwhelming presence they can give to people when trying to help and educate others. They can also feel self-righteous and militant about their values and causes, which can irk some people. This archetype can also become too anxious and self-conscious about its own impact on their environment, constantly adjusting itself in order to meet internal and external standards, which can become exhausting for them;

Patterns & Structure

- 126s are triple compliant and hesitant. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that try to adjust itself to the moral viewpoint and expectations of its environment in order to feel included, safe, and appreciated. This tritype is very helpful, and needs to meet (and often surpass) the authority's expectations for the sake of being satisfied with its own inner standards.

Self-preservation subtypes of this archetype are anxious individuals who almost always veer into the secure side of things if something doesn't feel right or is off. They are very perfectionistic in all they do and can be overly cautious in doing so.

The sexual variant is less focused on safety in the material sense and more concerned about faithfulness in their intimate relationships. They don't fit the stereotypical compliant stance of this archetype because they can spring into action when needed and are more in touch with their instinctual nature. However, they are quite rigid about everything going their way and can manifest their anger with a surprising intensity.

Social subtypes are the most rigid and rule-abiding of the three variants. They embody the teacher or role-model to turn to and follow, and can be quite prideful in doing so. This is also a very militant subtype;

Interests:

- being of service
- helping others achieve their goals
- sticking to the rules
- being well-prepared
- feeling accepted and approved by others

Mission:

- supporting others

Blind spots:

- being overly critical, expecting too much of yourself and others
- not looking after yourself enough
- frequent worries and anxiety, thinking about what-ifs

Fears:

- wrongdoing
- humiliation
- doubt
- scary situations
- being left alone
- not being worth anything

If you are a 126, you are diligent, caring, and inquisitive. You want to be ethical, helpful, and supportive. Highly responsible and cooperative, you are most comfortable when you do things ‘by the book’ and know what to expect. Focused on the needs and concerns of others, you seek ways to be of service. You enjoy being the power behind the throne. You also need to be seen as the one that makes the extra effort to do what is called for in any given situation.

Your life mission is to find structured ways to give and be of assistance to others. A true helper, you are happiest when you are in a position to support others achieve their goals.

You can be overly fixed in your opinion of what is right and be rigid in your expectations of yourself and others, and thus come across as disapproving or militant. This type ignores their own desires. They are very loyal and act as they feel they should, and often for others. They want to serve, and they tend to expect others to as well. Fear of desperateness, humiliation, and doubt. Tendency to seek things they will accept, approval and assurance. This is absolutely the “caring friend” archetype.

6 core + a strong secondary 1 fix creates high rigidity/uptightness and an extremely categorical, black-and-white outlook on moral issues

The dependent types (1-2-6) have repressed their mental center and given up thinking, and can thus be defined as seeking temperate solutions and being Horney's dependent type.

6 by nature is questioning and doubting, but 1 fix is supremely uncomfortable with uncertainty and lack of structure. 6+1 tends to want to understand a concept or scenario at 100% with no stone left unturned. When there's uncertainty along the way, or when something doesn't quite fit or make sense, the 6+1 feels mental discord and needs to put everything neatly in a structured place. 6+1's become extremely frustrated when things are inaccurate or flaky. 6 is always questioning discrepancies, but what it really wants is to be able to yield to something that's actually true and finally stop asking questions. With 1 fix, there's no room for ambiguity. 1 as a frustration type pulls 6 into the place where it is dissatisfied with its own thinking process and needs to refine it.

261: Triple complaint/The Obedient

For example, a 2 that occasionally deals with anxiety by distracting themselves and deals with anger by controlling their surroundings, would be a 2-7-8, and would be different to a two that deals with anxiety with vigilance, distrust of authority, and anger by being self-critical, which would be 2-6-1.

261 and 269 seem like they should be similar, but are actually very different types of 2. Both are helpful, dutiful, and kindhearted. The 269 is the good Samaritan that is very helpful, mellow, and passive. They struggle with asserting themselves, but work tirelessly for others. The 261 is the true militant 2 that is very 1-ish and strident, with a focus on being of service. They can think that they are a 1 at first, especially with the social instinct.

The 126, 216 and 612, are all focused on helping and being supportive of others regardless of which type is dominant.

So, the 136, 137 and 126 would most focus on preparing, being busy and responsible. The 1 and 6 feel they must be responsible, the 3s must do, achieve, and perform, the 4s must accomplish, the 8s must be executing, and so on.

621 [Transcribed from Fauvre's video:] "When these three types come together, you get someone that is very focused on being of assistance. The 2 wants to help people. The 6 wants to help, in their own way. They want to be of assistance and be connected to you. And then, the 1 wants to do what's right. So, when these three types come together, you have someone who feels that they should help, and they must be of assistance and be kind to others. It is also a very diligent 6; that 1 brings the diligence, and the 2 brings a lot of compassion. We feel more warmth whenever the 6 has 2 in the tritype. ...All three types have rigidity in their character structure. ...The growing edge for the 621/126/etc. tritype is to begin to let go of the structure of how you should be, and instead listen to your heart and intuition.

--[For the body center, although I have some 9, I tend to lean on 1. I'm a perfectionist, wanting to make things right, to a kind of sense of certainty there...knowing what's right, what's best to do. I get a little judgmental and critical at times...]

When you have 1 and 6 coming together, you also get that tendency to critique things, and can be critical. But he has a gentleness, that you know that someone's really there. The compassion's there, but there's a firm inner-core. Also, warmth and professionalism. You have that friendly rapport, which is the 6 and 2 coming together, but you also have that understanding of structure, process, and the teacher quality. 6s that have more of the 9 aren't necessarily more obvious as teachers or mentors. That 1 and 6 combination gives us a little more tasking 6, and a bit more solid 6, and a 6 that's going to be a little more on their own agenda than the 6 with the 9."

I think this ONE is the most attracted to being of assistance and helping others mindfully. This is a sociable and highly hesitating ONE that is the most militant to a cause or a group. They fear being excluded from the gang and quell their anxiety by being of service. This is also a softer ONE compared to most, especially if sp leading, since they have TWO's need for relating and SIX's need of being accepted and reassured. They are often at their best when working in tandem rather than as a boss, since they can be quite easily rattled upon taking big decisions. Their true power typically lies behind the throne. This ONE works really hard to gain the trust of their peers and bosses, so much so, that they can easily fall prey to overexertion. This tritype amplifies ONE's need to be dutiful and observing rules to a T. This ONE is very rigid and is the triple compliant.

The 126, 162, 216, 261, 612, and 621 are all focused on helping and being supportive of others regardless of which type is dominant.

The Compliant Group (sometimes referred to as the Dutiful Group) consists of enneagram types 1, 2, and 6. Each of these types are compliant/dutiful in their own ways, but they all move toward people in hopes of earning what they desire (autonomy for 1s, attention for 2s, or security for 6s)

Pros of the Compliant Group types: they are committed, hard workers, sacrificial, and responsible.

Cons of the Compliant Group types: they have a hard time relaxing and may feel superior to others (although this may not always be evident)

Type 1s in the Compliant Group

Enneagram type 1s move toward people by following the rules in hopes of earning autonomy.

Type 2s in the Compliant Group

Enneagram type 2s move toward people by loving and caring for them in hopes of earning attention.

Type 6s in the Compliant Group

Enneagram type 6s move toward people by being loyal to others in hopes of earning security.

Advice for Compliant Group

Be aware that as a compliant type, you tend to default to rules and belief systems in order to know what to do. This is because compliant types are "unproductive" in their thinking. Try to think through what is actually needed before instinctually following the rules or belief systems that you have in place.

The word “compliant” may make you think these numbers are naturally compliant to the will of other people, but that’s not necessarily true. Above other numbers, 1’s, 2’s, and 6’s are compliant to their own superegos. That means, they are always reflecting on their self-critical conscience to tell them what the “right” decision or action may be. Above all, they feel the need to EARN what they want.

These numbers are often recognized for being of service to other people. They are on the lookout for the greater good, they like to follow the rules and live up to social norms. In addition, people in this group tend to (consciously or unconsciously) assume they are better than other people.

For Enneagram 1, their primary drive is control. Their social stance is often one that, if they follow the rules and do what is right, they can achieve what they want. They often find themselves in positions of authority. If they walk into an event or situation that is disorganized, they immediately notice how it would be better if they were in charge.

Enneagram 2 is in search of identity and acceptance. Often labeled “The Helper,” they seek to get what they want by jumping to the assistance of someone else. People in this group often seem like they want to fly under the radar, but they can also assume the “martyr” role if no one recognizes or appreciates them for their actions.

Enneagram 6 is looking for safety and security and therefore are more prone to feelings of inferiority than 1’s and 2’s. Their feelings of being “better than” other people often stem from being part of a larger group they identify with. For example, they take pride in belonging to a certain political party or coming from a certain city. They often achieve what they want by leaning into the group’s definition of right and wrong.

When we talk of the types being compliant, it is a compliance to the superego. The focus is more on society and the people around them rather than themselves as seen with the assertive types. These people ‘move with’ others, focusing on feeling what is happening around them and then acting accordingly.

For Type 2 this action is focused on people. The desire to help others and attend to their needs outweighs focusing on their own needs. Type 1 directs their focus to social standards. They act to maintain justice and preserve social law within their groups. Type 6 will act more towards their situation they are present within, constantly assessing its safety and working towards building a secure environment.

For the Compliant Stance, sometimes it's good to look inward at their own desires. Each type can be self-sacrificing in some way, and so to be aware of how your own desires may not be in line with your society’s desires is important in acting in a way that can attend to both. Often, the Complaint Types can be very unaware of how their personal reasoning is heavily influenced by the communities they are involved in.

Compliant Type:

These types gravitate towards the feeling and doing centers, bowing down to the will of other people and have no contact with their own thoughts.

Type 1, is in the instinctual center, and they know the ego of people higher than them very closely. They receive their wisdom and go about changing the world with that.

Type 2 in the heart center wants to be loving and helpful to other people. They are most likely to go ahead with their feelings through acting on them and not just thinking.

Type 6 who are in the thinking center do not have any contact with their minds, but let the beliefs and ideals of others drive their lives.

The compliance (Horney's "moving toward people") include types One, Two, and Six. These three types share a need to be of service to other people. They are the advocates, crusaders, public servants, and committed workers. All three respond to difficulty and stress by consulting with their superego to find out what is the right thing to do, asking themselves, "How can I meet the demands of what others expect of me? How can I be a responsible person?"

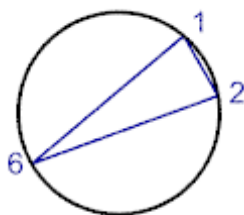

It is important to understand that the compliant types are not necessarily compliant to other people; they are, however, highly compliant to the demands of their superegos. These three types try to obey the internalized rules, principles, and dictates that they have learned from childhood. As a result, they often become authority figures themselves—especially Sixes and Ones. (Twos can sometimes also be authority figures, although more often by trying to be the "good parent" or a trusted adviser to others.)

When a person whose type is in the compliant group enters a room, their automatic sense of self is that of being "better than" others, although how this is expressed is usually subtle. Ones may come into the room and subconsciously think, "This is so sloppy and disorganized. If I were in charge, things would not be such a mess."

Twos enter a room and subconsciously think, "These poor people! I wish I had time to give everyone my attention. They look troubled—they need my help!" By approaching others from the position of the "loving person" who gives their concern and service to others, Twos automatically put themselves in the superior role of being "better than" others.

Sixes are more troubled by inferiority feelings than Ones or Twos, but they get a sense of "better than" through their affiliations and social identifications. ("I'm a Democrat, and we are better than Republicans!" "I live in New York, which is a better city than Los Angeles." "Nobody's better than my team, the 49ers!")

The Compliant Style (Types 1, 2, 6)

Compliant

People whose dominant Social Style is the compliant style are responsible, dedicated, and want to do what's expected of them. They will do what they believe is best, even if it means sacrificing their own wants. They are committed to their promises, working hard to finish what they said they would do. Furthermore, they have a hard time relaxing or playing, because there is always work to do (and they would feel guilty resting when there is work to do). They have a sense of being a little superior to others, although this characteristic is very subtle. Under stress, they seek advice from their conscience to determine the right thing to do.

These people work great in groups where the rules or procedures are agreed upon. Within that structure, they work tirelessly.

These people are out of touch with their inner guidance. The inner guidance is a mental quality which effortlessly observes and understands what to believe and what to do. To compensate for this imbalance, these people seek belief systems or rules to help them deal with ambiguity and uncertainty. They consult their rules and beliefs to define their position on issues.

These people try to obey internalized rules and principles to get what they want.

The Compliant Style of Ones

Ones want autonomy, so they try to earn it according to the rules. If they do their work better than anyone else, no one will interfere with them). Under stress, Ones escalate their principles into perfectionism or workaholism. If they are perfect, no one has can criticize them. Ones believe they are morally superior to others.

The Compliant Style of Twos

Twos want attention, and try to get it by following the rules. If Twos love, help, and care enough for others, they will earn attention from others. If Twos do not receive enough attention, they will increase the amount of help they give. If they are all-loving saints, no one will reject them, and they will be loved (the ultimate attention) in return. Twos set themselves up as superior by making others dependent on them

The Compliant Style of Sixes

Sixes want security, and try to get it by following the rules. If Sixes are sufficiently dedicated and committed to an authority figure, they will earn security from it. If Sixes do not receive enough security, they will either strengthen their commitment to their current authority figure (to give it a chance to provide more security), or they will rebel against it and seek security from another source. Their commitment to their cause/belief/authority figure gives them confidence and makes them look down upon those with different beliefs.

Compliant/Superego - 126

Moving with others, focus on what others' need/want, society, "earn" needs

1: Justice, social standards, doing what's right rather than what you want

2: Focus on the needs of others rather than self

6: Focus on building a secure environment for all, being "human," tribes

Types 1, 2, & 6 are in the Compliant/Dutiful group, and they comply towards others to get what they desire.

1-2-6: A devoted, friendly, affiliative, and altruistic One, very dedicated and conscientious but also more controlling and possessive of others. Seek people's company and want to help them, but sometimes tend to become a little manipulative and demanding, expecting appreciation and loyalty in return for their efforts. They are affectionate, caring and reliable friends and partners, but at times they can struggle with anxiety and start worrying about things going wrong.

Usual subtypes: social, 1w2

Flavors: helpful, devoted, giving and demanding

1-6-2: Responsible, dutiful, and devoted friends, these Ones are more affiliative and empathetic than others. Friendship and mutually-supportive relationships are important to them, and so are trust, loyalty, and integrity. They can be more rigid and rule-bound because of their insecurities: they are slow to change their old beliefs even when they're proven wrong, and they're usually steadfast and honest people. They're somewhat suspicious and skeptical, but once they trust someone, they are capable of great generosity.

Usual subtypes: social, self-preserving, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-2-6, 6-1-2, 2-1-6

127 – The Teacher Archetype

127/172: Caring and innovative 1. This is the most supportive and friendly 1. This 1 loves to teach and mentor. They use their organizational skills to help educate others on ways to improve themselves and be responsible. This is the 'playful' 1 that loves to teach and inspire. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

271/217: Innovative and discerning 2. This is the most light-hearted 2 but can be critical, especially if a social subtype. This 2 seeks order but wants to be creative and play. They often become teachers. This 2 tends to focus on values. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

721/712: Discerning and caring 7. This is the responsible and nurturing 7 that is upbeat, purposeful, and orderly. A true helper and teacher, this 7 wants to be of assistance to others, especially with a 6 wing and/or a social subtype. The core fears are of fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, worthless, needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, immutable, and inconsequential.

Gut: 1 Heart: 2 Head: 7

Anxiety Management

- 127s deny their anxiety by focusing on the positive and anticipating fun and new ways to maintain and enhance group harmony with good foundations;

Primary Strengths

- 127s are excellent teachers, as their name would suggest. They love to share information and present it in an interesting and exciting way, so much so that they rarely get boring;

Introversion vs Extraversion

- 127s are definitively the most extroverted compared to 125 & 126. They generally don't shy away from the limelight and love to interact with and let their audience speak their mind;

Emotional Rapports

- 127s want to create harmony at all times and love to be part of a social grouping because they feel needed and appreciated;

Productivity Levels

- 127s can be very productive, but only if they are in a positive and supportive environment, otherwise they can quickly be demoralized and depressed;

Creativity

- 127s can be quite creative in order to solve social and relationship issues. They love to come up with interesting methods to get people to get along;

Anger Manifestation

- 127's anger is usually contained and effusive over time. They don't want to manifest it as it would be surrendering it to their dark side;

Compliance Factor

- 127s are the most comfortable compared to 278 & 279 with structure and discipline. They love to sprinkle their everyday job with a dash of enjoyment and spontaneity in order to keep things interesting;

Personal Values

- 127s prefer to keep their moral convictions to themselves, as they think they would spoil the enjoyment of the group and tarnish the overall objectivity that they present;

Potential Problems

- 127s can oscillate too frequently between the need to keep things positive and fun and a more rigid and controlling attitude. This dichotomy can be hard to balance and may account for considerable internal tension that needs to be addressed. Additionally, they can make light of a situation when it could have been better taking it more seriously and vice versa. This very positive tritype may hide its pain and negativity in order to avoid rejection and disconnect from their environment;

Patterns & Structure

- 127s are triple other-oriented and teaching. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to be in contact with people and provide helpful information with a fun spin, regardless of which subtype predominates them. They are definitively people persons that like to connect with people and almost always want to help people look at things in a new, better angle, making them energetic and optimistic.

Self-preservation with this subtype are excellent at providing concrete support and enjoying life at its simplest form. They aren't as demanding and spiritual as the other two subtypes, and thus respect their limits more.

Sexual dominants with this tritype are idealists who often want to reform and mold the world to their liking. They are less in touch with reality, but often have tremendous charisma and energy to accomplish what they want. They tend to become very frustrated with outside limitations and can become moody more easily.

Social 127s are quite sunny in character, but can view their sin of gluttony as a hindrance to their ideals and consequently try to avoid showing it in public. They are usually very active and involved in numerous group activities and like to add their optimistic viewpoint to the table;

Interests:

- learning and teaching
- assisting others
- meaningful activities
- providing inspiration to others

Mission:

- learning, teaching, and helping others

Blind spots:

- overly optimistic, not acknowledging potential problems
- expecting too much
- overly focused on having fun and seeing the positive side, not allowing negative feelings

Fears:

- being lonely
- being unloved

If you are a 127, you are diligent, caring, and innovative. You want to be ethical, empathetic, and inspired. Engaging, fun-loving, and outgoing, you want to be with people. You seek fun with a purpose, needing goals as well as time to play and celebrate and enjoy life. You love discovering new things. Furthermore, you have a gift of being able to squeeze the boredom out of anything tedious. You may seem stern at times, but you are actually very lighthearted and enjoy teaching others what matters to you.

Your mission is to help those in need of guidance, hope, and inspiration. A true teacher, you are happiest when you can use your teaching skills to make learning a creative and enjoyable experience.

Your blind spot is that you can be so focused on what is appropriate and pleasing that you stop listening to your feelings, and rigidly maintain unrealistic ideals. You can also be hyper-focused on keeping things overly positive and upbeat. Your growing edge is to be willing to experience emotional pain. You can be overly identified with positive emotions and appropriate behavior. Negative emotions teach us what we are feeling and are an important aspect of any decision-making process.

The line between ONE and SEVEN links two opposite concepts together: the ONE part needs to shape and refine its environment to its specific standards (control) and the SEVEN part emphasizes the need to explore the numerous sensations and be mentally stimulated by them. When ONE and SEVEN meet in a tritype, they automatically bring out those two opposite forces front and center, thus the individual can be torn between the need for control and chaos. This can bring a lot of anxiety and irritation; since when they want to indulge and enjoy what their environment has to offer (SEVEN), they can't seem to be able to completely let go and relax because of the ONE's sense of duty and strong superego. On the other hand, if they want to make something worthy of their time (ONE), the SEVEN energy jumps in, telling them that it must be enjoyable and fun in order for them to be completely invested in it. While we could argue that every tritype brings about this kind of push-pull energy at times, this is really amplified with this

ONE-SEVEN line. Even more so with the 147 tritype because of the additional need for FOUR to create something meaningful and deep.

What kind of one-liner would you give for a 7-1-2? Katherine described it as a person needing to find structured ways to play and be of service. They like to teach and to support others. It's the classic elementary school teacher archetype that wants to find innovative but structured ways to make learning or improving enjoyable to people. Their blind spot is they can become so attached to their way of innovation and doing "fun", that they can gloss over negative feelings that need to be addressed or become too rigid in their expectations, thus making things not fun.

The 371 is very positive, orderly, and success oriented. They are focused on the goal and building the foundation, especially if self-pres. They are often empire builders. Furthermore, they need completion. The 271 is less foundational and more people oriented. They are very positive and upbeat. They focus more on relationships, whereas the 371 focuses on the achievement.

271 is the archetype of the teacher. When 2 is dominant, there is a strong passion to want to teach something of an interpersonal nature. Yes, you are very different from one another...different gifts...different dilemmas, but complimentary. The 271 is the positive energy with a mission to teach and inspire others. Fun with a purpose.

(2)-7-1 : The Idealistic 2
2-(7)-1 : The Compliant 7
2-7-(1) : The Positive 1

Very friendly and somewhat delusional type.

1-2-7: This is usually a very friendly One: fairly generous, caring, optimistic, and also a bit playful when having a good day. Prefers being around people and is afraid of being lonely and unloved. This tritype is more compassionate, tolerant and understanding and has a desire to help other people and make their lives happier. Therefore, they have many friends. They enjoy a good laugh and occasionally a bit of variety as well.

Usual subtypes: social, sexual, 1w2

Flavors: friendly, sociable, kind and approachable

1-7-2: This is typically a healthier One: generous, open, friendly, and willing to kick back and have fun more often. Avoids loneliness and tries to keep a busy schedule, with lots of projects and things to do – they typically also bring most of them to completion. This tritype is more tolerant and accepting of change and differences: they enjoy trying something new every once in a while. They are more flexible, outgoing, playful, and optimistic than other Ones.

Typical subtypes: sexual, social, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-2-7, 2-1-7

135 - The Technical Expert Archetype

135/153: Focused and knowledgeable 1. This is the most discriminating and precise 1. These 1s are often teachers or administrators. This 1 focuses on achievement and is good with details that require precision. This 1 is typically technical and in medical fields. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

351/315: Knowledgeable and discerning 3. This is the most intellectual and perfectionistic 3. This is the rational 3 that is highly methodical and precise. If introverted, this 3 is frequently mistaken for a 5 or 1. This 3 typically has good small motor skills like a surgeon and enjoys work that is detail oriented. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

531/513: Discerning and focused 5. This is the most scientific and remote 5 that enjoys systems and models. This is the most technical 5 and is often suited for laboratory work. Highly focused and removed, this 5 is uncomfortable with intense feelings. This 5 seeks value through achievement. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, and unmasked.

Gut: 1 Heart: 3 Head: 5

Inherent Strengths

- 135s are superb at accuracy and absorbing a massive quantity of technical details, making them versatile and effective in rigorous and brainy work;

Working Styles

- 135s prefer working alone and with things rather than people. In the Holland theory, they are a great example of a Realistic type;

Mental Processes

- 135s like to take a concept apart by breaking it down to its core, revealing the essential and most useful details in order to be the most efficient without sacrificing the quality and thoroughness;

Communications skills

- 135s aren't very sociable, even the social subtypes, and can be very blunt and forceful when communicating to people;

Fields of Interests

- 135's specialty is about implementing what they've learned tangibly. They prefer to study about things rather than human relations;

Social Roles

- 135s prefer to achieve their goals and use their mental powers to perform and excel in their domain;

Talents

- 135s are masters at fully understanding a complex problem and excel at using technical tools to perform in their duty;

Adaptability

- 135s are the least adaptable compared to 358 & 359; they prefer to stick to the rules and not make any compromises;

Activity Levels

- 135s need to be sure of all details being right before jumping into actions, and can frequently retreat in order to check their accuracy on different topics;

Potential Problems

- 135s can be so into defining and reanalyzing problems that they can lose the big picture in favor of the details. They can thus become obtuse, obstructive, and opposed to change. They can also have poor interpersonal skills that can hinder their credibility in the long run if they wish to promote their findings. Furthermore, they really need to pay attention to how they speak to people as they are very data-oriented, losing the feeling part in the process. Finally, they can be arrogant and boast about their mental abilities, unintentionally making other people feel deficient or less skilled;

Patterns & Structure

- 135s are triple competency and exacting. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to analyze and be precise with data in order to be productive. This archetype thrives in jobs and tasks that need them to be very detail-oriented and ultra-focused. They don't like when they need to deal with emotions or irrational topics.

Self-preservation type with this tritype are extremely private and removed from their environment. The THREE side of this archetype is less showy and more focused on being efficient and productive. They can be surprisingly humble with their work and skills, since the THREE here is going against vanity.

Sexual dominants with this tritype are less stereotypical by being more fluid in their demeanor. They often put more creativity in their work than the other subtypes and can have a bit more access to their emotional needs.

Social subtypes are very keen on being seen as the expert of their field and are less emotionally withdrawn than the other two subtypes. They seek recognition and often like to teach in a technical or scientific field;

Interests:

- achieving things

- learning
- gaining perfect knowledge

Mission:

- using hard work and acute observations to achieve goals

Blind spots:

- following protocols and rules too much, not listening to values and feelings
- seeming cold and distant
- being narrow-minded
- ignoring emotions

Fear:

- failure

If you are a 135, you are diligent, focused, and knowledgeable. You want to be ethical, efficient, and wise. Highly rational, you seek systems and procedures. Detail-oriented, you like mathematical concepts and finding ways to breakdown and understand complex material. You are very precise and good with exacting details that others find difficult to manage. You like seeing interconnections from an unbiased perspective that can at times come across as technical and impersonal.

Your life mission is to be focused and to use your powers of observation to achieve goals. A true technical expert, you feel happiest when you use your knowledge and precision skills to create, achieve and teach.

You can be so focused on what you perceive is accurate, effective, and logical that you can appear to be cold and distant. Your attention to detail is so critical in your life that the key is to recognize that it governs your decisions.

The 135, 358, and 359 tritypes are naturally inclined to be tenacious and persistent.

The 361 is an incredibly discerning, focused and responsible type. She said they will be the most inclined to want to live up to a successful image by societal standards and to focus on duty in order to feel valuable. She called it the “true taskmaster” that is inclined to create structure and rules that others in society can follow and to implement them. Furthermore, she said the blind spot is that one can be so overly focused on the rules that they can lose touch with their own values and feelings in deference to what is acceptable or societally defined. This is the type at risk of becoming robotic (along with the 135). However, the 351 is less relational than the 361.

351- Driven, wants to be successful (manifests in whatever their idea of being successful is), knowledgeable and well-equipped, as well as striving to be correct/“perfect” (again, in what their idea of perfection is). Lots of self-discipline, staunch. Probably concerned with having a good image (1 and 3 coming into play), being appropriate. Smooth though, a bit of social grace from being a core 3, softens out the stand-offish 5 attributes. Focused, critical, decisive. Focused, could be introverted or extroverted. Social climber, wants to be esteemed for their abilities, probably a collector of little facts, purposeful and executive in their decisions. Observant, carries themselves with confidence, polite, detached.

3-5-1 tritype: driven, self-disciplined, success and image oriented (but the image is not one of flash. It's ALWAYS perfect and appropriate.)...discerning, self demanding, and judgmental with a focus on control. Extremely productive and hardworking, she barely gives herself a break, but when she does, it's like a huge release. It's always planned, though. Highly intelligent and focused, but can be narrow-minded at times. Even though she's capable of seeing other perspectives, if she's convinced of the “rightness” of hers, she will be harsh, critical, and obstinate. 351s conduct themselves in a highly competent and rational manner. They usually know exactly how to reach their goals and work very diligently to reach those goals.

Logic + Focus + Ambitions = 513

5 + 1 has the perceptiveness and thoroughness of the type 5 mixed with the practicality and morality of type 1, it pushes more to this cerebral aspect of both types but with more objectivity and groundedness on account of the 1.

1-5-3 is triple competence. They are going to be good boys and girls and want to do things right. They will tend to be intelligent, do well at school, probably be a professional, often tend towards the scientific.

Descriptions I've read of this tritype have overemphasized its coldness, imo. But they are stubborn and tend to think they're always in the right.

When I think of 153, the first person I'd think of is Mr Spock, along with the Vulcans, who are sometimes seen as 5s.

As far as I can see, both the strength and weakness of 153 thinking is that it's typically based on scientific rationale. You've mentioned some of its advantages. However, Kirk and other leaders show that the likelihood of success with any plan is based on factors other than just facts, figures, and logic that the Vulcans value. Another issue with 1's is that they're inclined to think that if the benefits of a particular course of action are obvious, then there's no need to motivate people towards a given objective.

Fauvre calls this the most rational tritype on the enneagram. Laser-focused, often very skilled with their hands. Can make very good surgeons. Rarely get rattled.

The challenge for this type would be getting in touch with their feelings and those of others, and seeing the benefit of sometimes putting feelings first.

Anon—you said you think the “coldness” is overemphasized. This could be true. I'm wondering if all triple types make greater use of their wings and lines than other types just to avoid this one-dimensionality.

Their focus on detail can get in the way. My brother can be so focused on precision that practicality and expediency goes out the window. He can completely miss the bigger picture because he's so focused on smaller stuff being correct. Haha, to a really ridiculous extent. He can start out with an objective in mind and then get sidetracked by detail until he's sitting there taking 5 minutes to straighten a stack of papers. So, ironically, because he's so focused on competency, he can end up being very incompetent.

Yes, I want to do what is right, and I often use a very scientific way to get it right. For example, when I decided to get an aquarium I first read everything about aquariums, how to set them up, which fishes to put together and so on and so on. I became quite obsessed until I was confident that I would be able to install my new aquarium the right way.

When it comes to school and work, I am very organized and confident. I know that everything I do is done well, and somehow I just feel it in my guts that I do better than most of the other people. When it comes to my private life, I am not as sure of myself. I am very introverted and keep my feelings to myself. Wow this probably makes me sound like a horrible arrogant jerk, but I assure you I am not...at least most of the time, but when I need to be a jerk to get things done the right way, then...

513: serene, individualistic, methodical, and intellectual. Has a strong sense of ethics and discipline (1).

All three Focused Responder Enneacards

(Enneagram Types: 1, 3, & 5)

You see yourself as controlled, disciplined, tenacious and pragmatic. You avoid error and sloppiness in your work and people who over-focus on their emotions. Naturally focused and perfectionistic, you like to set goals. You prefer to respond when you have had time to assess and evaluate.

3-5-1 : The Objectivist

You have someone who withdraws from people despite wanting people to acknowledge their intellectual brilliance. There is a tug between staying tucked away safely where nobody can impose on them, and wanting the world to see, acknowledge, and admire them for their smarts. Uncomfortable with self-promotion. Can be pretty asocial. Highly smart, deeply systems oriented, is always looking for ways to use their knowledge to execute plans for betterment of the individual and the society. A perfection-seeking visionary, achievement oriented, loner, cynic, detail oriented and nitpicky, reclusive.

The 3-5-1 tritype is self-driven, image-driven, and judgmental. This tritype is extremely tough and rarely takes breaks. It can also be harsh and critical. It is also obstinate. These characteristics make it difficult for them to get along with others. The tritype 3-5-1 isn't the best fit for a team setting.

5-1-3: Most scientific and remote Five. Most technical. Uncomfortable with intense feelings.

Employing mechanisms based on a feeling of competence. (1-3-5)

I would consider myself 531. This doesn't mean I read all the profiles and decided that I identify with each of these in this relative order, nor does it just mean that I seek knowledge, achievement, and rightness. Rather, I have found there to be my primary patterns of dealing with reality when I look across my lifespan. Also, when I get into ruts, it's usually governed by one of these three areas, with the type 5 being the primary problem. Most of my self-monitoring goes into watching the type 5 pattern play out on a day-to-day basis, but I also need to watch for type 3 issues with anything related to my self-image, and type 1 issues with anything related to...well, “gut” stuff.

Basically, I see the 1-2-5 as tipping things, in the heart triad, towards the sort of self-sacrificial idealism of 1—but at the cost of competency preoccupation which 3 brings. A warmer, maybe less scientific person, who will more readily throw science out the window for the sake of helping others. Both Twos and Threes have a kind of workaholism, but Threes work better alone, and I think the 1-3-5 is ultimately the more reclusive trifix combo. The scholar, the diligent student, the expert practitioner. Whereas 1-2-5 is more like the field doctor, medic, or veterinarian. Objective, but involved, and conscious of others. Possibly does a lot of detailed work on their own, but they see themselves moreover as being in service of others. In some ways, 1-2-5 is a more “balanced” trifix/tritype. 1-3-5 gets overloaded with competency issues and comes out becoming too rigid, too logical for humanitarian work—people seem too chaotic, 1-3-5's know their own abilities and studies best, so they stick with those. They aren't “by the book” but would rather write the book themselves. They suffer more from feeling that they lack the innate ability to help others, so they practice more, try to get ahead, prepare, theorize, get involved with projects that keep face-to-face interaction to a minimum, but want to get things just right. More perfectionist, more critical.

5+1: Focused, serious tone. Critical outlook. The theme of sacrifice; dissolves wholly into their projects. Special interest in knowledge, skill, and discoveries to improve health, society, the future, and the like. Concerned for others in the abstract; difficult to get close to.

Competency Group, which includes the 1s, 3s, and 5s among us! ☹ (Sorry, I had to. Lol)

For Enneagram 1, this looks like using logic to find the “right” answer. When they don't get what they want, they may try to figure out what went wrong and make it better. They generally adhere to the rules (if they believe those rules to be helpful) and expect other people to do the same. When they do bend the rules, people rarely challenge them because they're known for rule-following.

When faced with difficulty, an Enneagram 3 goes to work to solve the problem logically (bending rules when the rules don't serve them.) If they can just stay focused on fixing the issue, they won't have time to feel negative emotions. When they successfully find a solution, they can add it to their list of achievements and skip right over the emotions brought on by the difficulty in the first place.

Enneagram 5 prefers to face difficulty by completely removing their emotions from the equation and using their brain to solve the problem. If they're not already an expert on the matter at hand, they will learn all they can about it so that they can be confident in their solution. Fives typically do not like operating inside the structure of rules and gladly work outside those bounds to achieve the outcome they want.

The Competency Approach (Types 1,3,5)

People whose dominant Harmonic approach is the Competency approach try solving problems in an objective, unemotional manner. Unlike people of the reactive approach, they don't get worked up when issues happen, they remain cool and emotionally detached from them.

When confronted by a problem, these types have issues on working within a framework or structure.

Competency of Ones

Ones can get into conflicts by being too impatient, rigid, and critical. Ones focus on solving problems by doing what's right. Ones strongly believe that by following the rules, their faith, or their principles, they will come to a just and fair solution. Ones feel that they must put their own wants (and feelings) aside in order to remain objective (and autonomous from influence). Ones may appear cold to others and that they don't take into account the feelings of others.

Competency of Threes

Threes can get into conflicts by being too competitive, insincere, and boastful. Threes focus on being efficient and meeting their goals. When confronted with problems, they can easily set aside their own feelings and focus on the task at hand. In general, Threes want to follow existing structures. However, Threes are also pragmatists that will cut corners to realize their goals.

Competency of Fives

Fives can get into conflicts by being too detached, isolated, and provocative. Fives naturally detach themselves emotionally from the world to be objective. They believe that they have the mental resources to deal with problems. In conflict, Fives will want to withdraw and will think for a while before coming back with a solution, often to the irritation of others. Fives feel that they can solve things by themselves, without relying on others. They may come back with highly original ideas (thinking outside the box). On the other hand, they may waste their time reinventing the wheel.

The Competency Group - Types 1, 3, and 5: The types in this group respond to conflict and difficulty by putting aside their feelings and being objective, effective, logical, and competent. They also tend to have issues around operating within structured systems: Ones operate within the rules of the system, Fives tend to operate outside the rules, and Threes go back and forth (wanting the benefits of the rules but not the restrictions).

The Competency Group consists of enneagram types 1, 3, and 5. Each of these types have competency in mind when faced with disappointment and/or conflict, but has their own variations on competency.

Types 1, 3, and 5 all put emphasis on different ways of being competent, they all manage feelings in different ways, and all have different ways of relating to systems and rules... but it is all in a competency minded way.

Type 1s in the Competency Group

1s put emphasis on being competent by being correct and sensible. They manage feelings by repressing and denying them, instead channeling their feelings into activity. 1s want to follow the system and can get upset with those who do not.

Type 3s in the Competency Group

3s put emphasis on being competent by being efficient and outstanding. They manage feelings by repressing and focusing on tasks. They also look to others for feeling cues. 3s want to work within the system, but also want to work on their own outside the system. They have little patience for rules.

Type 5s in the Competency Group

5s put emphasis on being competent by being an expert and having information. They manage feelings by detaching and staying cerebral. 5s reject the system and wants to work on their own. They have little patience for rules.

Advice for the Competency Group

Be aware that as competency types, you tend to deny emotions. Realize that sometimes it's needed to deal with feelings to fully process disappointment, and it helps you have better connection with others. Drawing on the strengths of the reactive and positive outlook groups can help you with the best outcome.

Competency - Types 1, 3, 5

When faced with an obstacle, the Competency group look towards resolution, working as quickly and efficiently as they can. They value an unemotional approach to problem-solving, valuing cognitive efficiency as opposed to the irrationality contained within emotional reasoning. Type 1 will focus on working within their belief systems, valuing moral law and ethical fairness. Type 5 in contrast strives for an omniscient view of the problem, moving outside the systems they are part of. Type 3 will do both, but mainly wants to resolve chaos smoothly without impacting themselves or others opinions of them.

Although efficiency is an effective problem-solving strategy, denying emotions can be detrimental. The advice for the Competency group is that feelings, though messy and irrational, are a necessary part of reacting to problems. Dealing with them, instead of denying or repressing, not only provides cathartic experience but also increases our empathetic connection with others, bettering relationships with all people.

Competency - 135

Focus on objectivity and rationality, doing things correctly and competently, neutrality

1: Reigning in impulses and funneling them into rigidity and correctness

3: Work ethic, focus on being able to do things well, repressing soft feelings in favor of productivity

5: Knowledge seeking, overfocus on detached objectivity, ignoring emotions

The Competency Triad (Enneagram types 1, 3, and 5) brings the gift of problem-solving. When something changes, these types easily brainstorm ways of coping, bringing in logic and reason. They have the ability to remain impartial and strategic. What's the best way to handle the changes that arise? Drawing on the strengths of the other triads can help them cut through the brainstorming to identify strategies that are also emotionally resonant and move them toward their best outcome.

THE COMPETENCY GROUP

TYPES 1, 3, AND 5

This group deals with conflict or difficulty by putting aside their own feelings and needs and attempting to solve problems logically and objectively. Each of the three types in the Competency group has a particular attitude toward playing by the rules.

- 1s naturally tend to play by the rules, and they expect others to do so, too.
- 3s will play by the rules if that works for them, but they're willing to bend the rules in order to meet their goals or objectives.
- 5s aren't interested in following rules. They don't like being a part of the system, so they prefer to do things their own way.

Types 1, 3, & 5 are in the Competency group and will put away their feelings in order to handle conflict competently.

1-3-5: A rather ambitious, elitist, and goal-oriented One, very hard-working and somewhat intellectually arrogant. They rarely show their feelings, and therefore they usually seem cold and very self-assured. These Ones are generally well-read, well-mannered and quite intellectually refined: they like to impress others with their intelligence, wisdom, and irreproachable work.

Usual subtypes: social, self-preserving, 1w9

Similar tritypes: 1-5-3, 3-1-5, 5-1-3

Flavors: competent, intellectual, ambitious, and refined

1-5-3: Usually introverted and elitist, prefer the scientific approach in nearly everything they do. These Ones appear colder and very self-certain, but can be rather sensitive and fearful on the inside. Are afraid of failure and not meeting the expectations of others, mainly because they think they do not have enough resources for all their projects. They are hard-working, thorough, and very meticulous, and their work is usually impeccable. They're particularly intellectual, knowledgeable, and objective.

Usual subtypes: self-preserving, social 1w9

Flavors: cerebral, scientific, meticulous, and objective

5-3-1: One of the most cold-blooded and self-controlled of the Fives, this tritype is remarkably efficient, hard-working, and competent, although a bit anal as well. They demand recognition for their contributions and are fairly concerned with their image and intellectual value. Somewhat self-righteous and impatient with others, they are however pragmatic and tactful enough not to compromise their goals by being too inflexible. These Fives are very clever, self-confident, perfectionist, arrogant, and glacial.

Typical subtypes: social, self-preserving, 5w6

Similar tritypes: 5-1-3, 3-5-1

Flavors: cold, composed, efficient, and self-important

5-1-3: Exacting, methodical, organized, and fairly self-righteous, these Fives have a compulsive need for logic and order in their environment. They are hard-working and more practical and pragmatic than other Fives, focusing on the efficiency and improvement of the systems that interest them. They also enjoy and expect receiving the deserved recognition for their efforts, considering their time and involvement very precious. This tritype is one of the most cool-headed, rigid and self-controlled.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, social, 5w6

Similar tritypes: 5-3-1, 3-5-1, 1-5-3

136 – The Taskmaster Archetype

136/163: Focused and inquisitive 1. This is the most driven and rule oriented 1. This 1 tends to be cautious and questions anything that is out of order, especially if self-preserving subtype. Can be mistaken for a 3 or a 6. This 1 is highly industrious and rarely stops doing tasks. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, fear, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, inconsequential, and chaos.

361/316: Inquisitive and discerning 3. This is the most dutiful and rule oriented 3, especially if a social subtype. Can be skeptical and rigid, and can be mistaken for a 6 or 1. This 3 is the true taskmaster, eager beaver. This 3 must 'do' and keep busy. The core fears are of failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, fear, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inconsequential, inappropriate, corruptible, and being condemned.

631/613: Discerning and focused 6. This is the most industrious 6. Eager beavers and highly responsible, they are always busy and can be mistaken for 3s. Fear is managed by achieving. They tend to feel the burden of obligation. They focus on duty and family. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, inconsequential, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, and unmasked.

Gut: 1 Heart: 3 Head: 6

Inherent Strengths

- 136s' strength lies in their work ethic and their capacity to withstand considerable amount of workload. They are the most responsible tritype;

Working Styles

- 136s like to work in tandem or within a team. They can often be seen leading people and are great at management;

Mental Processes

- 136s aren't known to be the most creative persons and can be quite skeptical about foreign ideas. They think and speak in a concrete and concise manner that need to see if concepts are applicable in real life;

Leadership Style

- 136s are comfortable in the shoes of a leader and can be very good at implementing changes for the sake of results. They can be more bossy and less empathetic;

Anxiety Management

- 136s reduce their anxiety levels by focusing on their goals and increasing their efforts to achieve what they want;

Sensitivity

- 136s are sensitive to the overall work that they produce and how it is perceived by a select group of authorities. They want to preserve their integrity and successful image at all costs;

Anger Management

- 136s can show anger that they deemed justified when people don't take tasks and engagement seriously and/or are disrespectful. Most of the time, however, they try to temper their frustration;

Relation with Rules & Regulations

- 136s are the most comfortable with the established rules and seek to implement them to the fullest. This archetype is often relentless in following and promoting orders from the higher ups;

Independence

- 136s try to keep their own internal sense of freedom in check and certainly won't allow others under his or her wing acting on a whim;

Potential Problems

- 136s is the tritype that is the most at risk of losing themselves into their work and thus can become workaholics. They may be uncomfortable about not doing a task correctly and can be anxious if they feel that their work is not good enough. Since they are so adamant about making a difference in their workplace, they can become downright tyrannical if they are in a position of leadership and don't keep their perfectionistic tendencies at bay. Additionally, they can become suspicious of people who don't want to cooperate and show an air of rebelliousness and can make them pay for their way of seeing things;

Patterns & Structure

- 136s are triple doing and industrious. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to provide excellence in their work and typically won't stop perfecting their game until they are meeting or surpassing expectations. This tritype often want to meet societal standards and be seen as an example or a role-model in their community (especially if social dominant).

Self-preservation subtypes are humble and very practical. They are typically anxious about performing their best in order to secure what they've earned, and are generally quite disciplined and frugal in life. They typically can be stuck in a rut and become overly rigid in their routine and lifestyle.

Sexual subtypes are a little more charismatic and able to act faster than self-preservation subtypes. They can be surprisingly emotional about what they consider dear to them, but can also be controlling and testy with the people they don't trust.

Social subtypes are the ones who seek recognition and fame the most and can work really hard to attain it. They like to show off what they are made off and like to be seen as exemplary or a moral icon;

Interests:

- focused on achieving things
- wanting to be of service
- feeling valuable and needed by others
- finding security

Blind spots:

- following protocols and rules too much, not listening to values and feelings
- seeming cold and distant

Fears:

- feeling anxious
- failing
- being alone
- not knowing what is happening
- not being capable

If you are a 136, you are diligent, ambitious, and inquisitive. You want to be ethical, efficient, and dutiful. Highly industrious and responsible, you are focused on achievement. You feel obligated to be orderly and create a successful image as dictated by society. Most importantly, you focus on your duty and finding certainty. You are inclined to follow a tried and true approach to everything you do.

She said the blind spot is that one can be so overly focused on the rules that they can lose touch with their own values and feelings in deference to what is acceptable or societally defined. You are diligent, focused and knowledgeable. Elegant, stoic, and resolute with a loyal professional veneer. Very self-critical. Strong ideas about how they should act and have main guidelines that they must follow and cannot deter from. They can feel like a break from work is a sin, and sometimes only feel okay working. This is one of the hardest workers, if not the hardest worker, of the 27 archetypes.

I was asked the differences between the 361, the 368, and the 369 tritypes. Since the question is which gut type is dominant. At a glance, it is most helpful to look at activity levels. The 361 is very industrious and busy doing to avoid anxiety, the 1 brings a need to do what is morally correct. The 368 is focused on fighting for justice, the 8 brings a need to overcome and prevail. The 369 is highly adaptable and focused on being in comfortable alignment with others.

361- Loyal supporter and upholder of whatever system. Recognize and acknowledge my loyalty and devotion to this cause. I'm upholding the justice correctly. I believe in this, so I'll stand by it. Interesting if you consider phobic or counterphobic 6, though type 6 can be a mixture of both, some lean more to one description than the other. I want to be acknowledged for my skeptical inclinations that allow me to root out what isn't true or is questionable and how by doing this I'm upholding the good and keeping things proper, I'm impeccable in this area.

As a Taskmaster, you are an incredibly discerning, focused, and responsible type. She said they will be the most inclined to want to live up to a successful image by societal standards and to focus on duty in order to feel valuable. She called it the “true taskmaster” that is inclined to create structure and rules that others in society can follow and to implement them.

This is the type at risk of becoming robotic (along with the 135/351/513). However, the 135/351/513 is less relational than the 136/361/613.

I am not 100% sure at this time, but for now I am thinking 613 with 6 being very much in charge.

I am a goal-oriented person who doesn't like being controlled by others. Furthermore, I am a friendly person. Sometimes, I come across as too mild/passive. I see it when people think they can control me. They are often surprised when they see I don't let myself get pushed so easily. Being a phobic Six makes it hard for me to truly stand up to someone, though, and I often end up relying on an “avoidance strategy”.

I focus mostly on competence/technical knowledge to get ahead in life, so I don't go out of my way to manipulate/mobilize others.

6 core + a strong secondary 1 fix creates high rigidity/uptightness and an extremely categorical, black-and-white outlook on moral issues

6 by nature is questioning and doubting, but 1 fix is supremely uncomfortable with uncertainty and lack of structure. 6+1 tends to want to understand a concept or scenario at 100% with no stone left unturned. When there's uncertainty along the way, or when something doesn't quite fit or make sense, the 6+1 feels mental discord and needs to put everything neatly in a structured place. 6+1's become extremely frustrated when things are inaccurate or flaky. 6 is always questioning discrepancies, but what it really wants is to be able to yield to something that's actually true and finally stop asking questions. With 1 fix, there's no room for ambiguity. 1 as a frustration type pulls 6 into the place where it is dissatisfied with its own thinking process and needs to refine it.

(3)-6-1 : The Compliant 3

3-(6)-1 : The Competent 6

3-6-(1) : The Normative 1

136 Compliance meets Harmony and meets Competence.

The 136 is focused on the rules. It is an important point, but they really, really stay on task and are always busy.

631--A 6 with a strong superego. Lots of issues regarding personal competency. At lower health, the most likely of the 6s to respond negatively and reactively to pressure from others, since there is already a nearly unbearable pressure from within.

--The first impression I get from this tritype is a strong image orientation. There's a constant need to impress others and to have a positive place in the social sphere. I see a need for perfection in all things, partly out of ego and partly out of duty. There's strong loyalty to causes, but more so community ones and not personal ones. But this is a very hands-on tritype who will work to achieve what (s)he wants to achieve. I see less manipulation here than the 3 might otherwise indicate, and more focus and drive.

--That doesn't ring true for me (I have this tritype). Duty to those worthy of it, yes, but I don't find "societal standards" to be high standards at all, or worth emulating in the slightest. I find that most of "society" sorely disappoints. The lowest common denominator rules. I also have a deep distrust for the public in general.

So, the 136, 137 and 126 would most focus on preparing, being busy and responsible. The 1 and 6 feel they must be responsible, the 3s must do, achieve, and perform, the 4s must accomplish, the 8s must be executing, and so on.

I have found the 136 needs to be busy to avoid feelings of anxiety. 136s can enjoy needle point, baking, cleaning, organizing and/or reading to keep the anxiety at bay.

[by timeless:] 6-1-3. That means they have the core desires of a 6, they interact with the world like a 1, and they like to be seen like a 3 would like to be seen. Breaking that down:

Type 6 is security-oriented, and can alternate between serious doubt and serious loyalty. They tend to be pretty rule-focused right off the bat (as they are a superego type) but then add 1 onto the mix and, like that tritype description gives you, they can get fixated on constructing appropriate rules. Type 1 is usually critical of themselves and others, which is the component that enables a Type 6 to channel their desire for a workable rule set into the desire to create a workable rule set. Type 3, the image type in this triad, likes to be seen as successful and effective. You can see how adding 6, 1, and 3 together would create a personality type that's dedicated toward seeking out the best rule set.

1-3-6: This One is often very hard-working and well-organized. Dutiful and diligent, they also keep an eye on their own interests and like to receive prizes and praise and boost their reputation among their peers. They prefer a leading role and can be excellent managers and leaders: they can get things done as they're efficient, more pragmatic and also more cautious and calculated. They can sometimes suffer from a bit of paranoia, and worry about their status, finances, or health.

Usual subtypes: social, 1w9

Similar tritypes: 3-1-6, 1-6-3

Flavors: hard-working, pragmatic, efficient, and cautious

1-6-3: Conscientious, responsible, cautious, and efficient, these Ones are very practical and productive. They're down-to-earth, realistic, and typically good managers of people and resources. They're also quite good at predicting and avoiding possible pitfalls and are talented troubleshooters: they're preventive and like to play it safe. Want their hard-work and thoroughness praised and (financially) rewarded, and sometimes they might act arrogantly and engage in self-praising when they feel unappreciated.

Usual subtypes: social, self-preserving, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-3-6, 6-1-3

137 – The Systems Builder Archetype

137/173: Focused and innovative 1. This is the most outgoing 1. Positive and upbeat, this is the efficient and goal-oriented 1 that seeks recognition. Highly responsible, this one seeks fun with a purpose and tends to be in positions when they can teach and inspire. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

371/317: Innovative and discerning 3. This is the most impressive 3. Most polished and trendy 3. This is the outgoing, upbeat, and responsible 3. This 3 is methodical and detail oriented. Can look like a 7 or 1. The core fears are of failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, and being condemned.

731/713: Discerning and focused 7. This is the most clinical and technical 7 that is highly efficient and focused on achievement. This is the perfectionistic 7 that enjoys working with people, systems, and processes. They are visionary foundation builders with positive intent. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, and unmasked.

Gut: 1 Heart: 3 Head: 7

Inherent Strengths

- 137s are very good at improving and envisioning new ways of doing things, and therefore can excel in many engineering and designing fields;

Working Styles

- 137s are excellent promoters and developers, so they can be quite adept at conceiving, demonstrating, and implementing their ideas. A very versatile tritype;

Mental Processes

- 137s are quick thinkers that always see the big picture and the little details in order to concretize their ideas into a reality. They know how to make something happen;

Emotional Rapports

- 137s care more about the overall impression that they can give to others, instead of actually creating emotional bonds and showing their vulnerabilities;

Productivity Levels

- 137s is the most productive compared to 127 & 147. Once they focus on their goals and adapt to their environment, only boredom can deter them from working;

Creativity

- 137s are ingenious people in the sense that they put their creative in service to their need for recognition and hard work. They can come up with great ideas when dealing with an opportunity to be productive;

Controlling their Environment

- 137s are very perfectionistic about their ideas and will often try to manipulate their environment in hopes for better cooperativeness;

Impatience and Anger

- 137s can channel their impatience and frustration into further developing their project in mind, avoiding unacceptable behavior to seep out;

Asserting their Will

- 137s don't assert their will directly and openly like 378s; they prefer filtering it through a more reasonable framework that fits the overarching ideals of a collective setting;

Potential Problems

- 137s are very perfectionistic and with that comes very high ideals that are often hard to keep up with. This can make this person very difficult to work with because of their tendency to swing between their need for structure and innovation, giving them a somewhat unpredictable nature. Like their fellow ONE + THREE tritypes, they can be overly focused on their work, but become more quickly irritated if the tasks are too repetitive and boring. Their constant need for change and variety can make them frustrated and tense if nothing goes according to their vision;

Patterns & Structure

- 137s are triple perfectionistic and improving. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that prefer to ask itself "what can be done better" and outperform others by pure ingenuity. They like to seek opportunities to promote themselves and present their work in a fun and creative way. They always have the eye to see that something might be better and/or more effective than what it is at its current state.

Self-preservation subtypes are very industrious and practical in their work. They are also known to be opportunistic and clever in getting the right contacts to give out the best outcome. Overall a very outgoing variant.

The Sexual dominant is very idealistic and bizarrely dreamy too! They are the least practical and savvy of all three subtypes and care more about pleasing and seducing others while also having a controlling stance in private. They can be enigmatic and a bit eccentric since the subtype doesn't mix well with the archetype.

Finally, the social variant is more concerned with keeping an innovative and sustaining image while keeping their enthusiasm in check. Social recognition is often very important to this tritype, and they need to maintain a pure, incorruptible persona to the world;

Interests:

- working towards goals
- working hard
- earning recognition
- achieving things
- freedom

Mission:

- working out how to achieve goals

Blind spots:

- overly focused on getting the details right
- overly focused on fitting in and being successful

Fear:

- failure

If you are a Systems Builder, you are diligent, ambitious, and innovative. You want to be ethical, efficient, and upbeat. You are self-motivated and want to achieve your goals in a positive and effective way. Furthermore, you want to do your best and want to enjoy doing it. You focus on success and seek ways to measure it. You are also very focused on building a successful foundation for whatever you do.

Your life mission is to figure out what needs to be done and find a pleasant way to do it. A true perfectionist, you are happiest when you enjoy life while successfully meeting your goals. You can be so focused on what others view as appropriate, positive and successful that you miss seeing what is necessary and truly important to you. From what I've read, goal orientated Systems builder's can do well in sales, whether that's in occupations such as real estate, advertising, or promotions work. This would make sense. Good with details, smooth with people. I've heard they "want to do good and look good doing it". Not always a pleasure to work for when things get tough. Frustration meets Competence meets Assertiveness does not make for the most compassionate soul. This tritype can be a great, if not the best, provider and great producer.

371- Positive, cheerful, but structured. Able to "let loose" and have fun, but will still want to "get back to work." Buoyant, wants to be recognized for their upbeat, social attitude, can surprise people when they point out that something is incorrect. Fairly friendly, and can appear more extroverted yet also have reserved qualities due to 1. Playful and restrained side. People person, easily charms their way in.

The 371 is very positive, orderly and success oriented. They are focused on the goal and building the foundation, especially if self-pres. They are often empire builders. Likewise, they need completion. The 271 is less foundational and more people oriented. They are very positive and upbeat. They focus more on relationships, whereas the 371 focuses on the achievement.

The 731 Tritype is known as the “Systems Builder” Tritype, which is a very focused, productive, and creative Tritype! The 731, even more so if the 7 is in charge, will like to be positive and upbeat, and will be focused on finding out what needs to be done, and finding the most pleasant and efficient way to do so. One blindspot is that this Tritype can be very perfectionistic, and can have a tendency to miss seeing what is important to them because they have become overly focused on what appears to be successful, positive, or appropriate to others.

The line between ONE and SEVEN links two opposite concepts together: the ONE part needs to shape and refine its environment to its specific standards (control) and the SEVEN part emphasizes the need to explore the numerous sensations and be mentally stimulated by them. When ONE and SEVEN meet in a tritype, they automatically bring out those two opposite forces front and center, thus the individual can be torn between the need for control and chaos. This can bring a lot of anxiety and irritation; since when they want to indulge and enjoy what their environment has to offer (SEVEN), they can't seem to be able to completely let go and relax because of the ONE's sense of duty and strong superego. On the other hand, if they want to make something worthy of their time (ONE), the SEVEN energy jumps in, telling them that it must be enjoyable and fun in order for them to be completely invested in it. While we could argue that every tritype brings about this kind of push-pull energy at times, this is really amplified with this ONE-SEVEN line. Even more so with the 147 tritype because of the additional need for FOUR to create something meaningful and deep.

(3)-7-1 : The Idealistic 3

3-(7)-1 : The Competent 7

3-7-(1) : The Aggressive 1

Pseudo-realist. They believe they know who they are and what the world is like. May suffer from delusions.

Transcribed from the Fauvre's video: “Well, it's an interesting combination, because the 1, the 3, and the 7 are all focused on different ways to look at something to build. So, the 1 is looking at the foundational details and qualities required for something to be done well. And the 3 is looking for the most effective and efficient way to do something. And the 7 has the vision. So, when those three types come together, you have someone that's superb at knowing what to do and how to approach it in a fun way. So, they want to meet their goals (especially if 3 is in charge), but they also want to do it in a way that's pleasant. They want it to be enjoyable. They want to be interpersonal. But they want to do it well. [This is someone who has two perfectionist types, 1 and 3, but then they have that 7 coming in there, saying ‘Let's make it fun and let's keep it positive’. The life purpose for this type is to figure out what needs to be done and find a pleasant way to do it. They're a true systems builder with a positive attitude. The blind spot for this type is that they can be so focused on what others view as appropriate, positive, and successful that they miss seeing what is necessary and truly important to themselves.] Let's look at the growing edge, what happens when you have that blind spot. Then, the growing edge is to focus on your inner world, because those three types tend to focus on external successes, especially when 3 is in charge. And the journey for this archetype, tritype, is to begin to look at the resources internally, and have the internal and external match.

[So, my tritype is 371, and it took me a while observing strategies I was using, and I definitely realized that I did use the 3, the 7, and the 1. One of the ways that I recognized that is that I have a lot of perfectionism in my work. I want to make sure that whatever I'm doing, it's not just the best, but it's also really just perfect. And, at the same time, I like to be creative, and I like my freedom. So, I knew that 7 was in there someplace.]

Well, the knowing what is pleasant, like ending with a smile. We'll notice that not everyone ends with a smile. Both the image type of 3 wants to have that pleasant quality, it's appropriate for the 1, and it's enjoyable for the 7. So you'll see it in the micro-expressions, and you'll see it also in the word choices."

My wife's a 317 (or 371). She's certainly a perfectionist, has high standards, very industrious, and can be a bit of a workaholic, especially around her job. When she sets her mind to a hobby or a project, she always finishes it. One of her biggest quips about her job is how others are not as competent as they could be (I suppose 1 criticism). She can be prone to expressing her boredom with her job fairly regularly and is always seeking new tasks/responsibilities & doing more work in order to stay interested (pretty unique solution to a problem with boredom, lol). The 7 desire for novelty and the 1 and 3 push towards competency can be in a little conflict at times—visibly so.

Her 7-fix really shines through her optimism for the future, pleasure, and novelty seeking in terms of new experiences (It would be tough for me if I didn't have someone who wanted to try new things as much/often as I do). We bond through our shared 7-fix and run our life/household through the 1. My 1 core and her 1 fix basically created a very functional household with the 7-ish ability to create a lot of unique ways for enjoying each other's company as well. There's always new ideas and ways to go out and have fun, or find ways to just have a wonderful time if we're staying in. Either through playing video games together, having a date night, Netflix and chill, novel sexual experiences or going out to theme parks and road trips.

A 371 said that when she moves to 1, it surprises her because this normally upbeat yet focused woman moves into righteous indignation and zeal and shocks her friends and family.

So, the 136, 137 and 126 would most focus on preparing, being busy, and responsible. The 1 and 6 feel they must be responsible, the 3s must do, achieve, and perform, the 4s must accomplish, the 8s must execute, and so on.

I think the 371 would execute most often and in accordance to their true goals; the 127 is the archetype of the teacher. The 137 is very similar...but their energy is focused differently.

I'm a 137. I want to make the world a better place (1) by increasing the efficiency of procedures (3) while also making it fun to follow such procedures through the use of incentives (7). This allows people to focus more on what's important (the development of more creative ideas (7) and personal growth (1). I care very much about fairness, more specifically gender equality (1). If a girl's got what it takes, she shouldn't have to deal with any bullshit obstacles that exist as a result of the patriarchy. I'm particularly interested in programming and app development because computers don't make mistakes (1) and because it will allow me to display information in a visually appealing way (3). One of my favorite kinds of problems are the ones that require interdisciplinary work. I like to figure out how I can apply an idea from one field and alter it slightly so that it is applicable in another (7). I also don't mind adding a little flair to things from time to time (3).

1-3-7: A more socially-adaptable, goal-oriented, and competitive One, that usually has many friends and connections. Often extroverted, assertive people, they make natural leaders, although they can be a little too narcissistic and self-important. They're good motivators and can come up with visionary ideas which they have the required determination and self-discipline to put in practice. They normally have a handy social network and can be quite entertaining and charismatic when needed.

Usual subtypes: social, 1w2, 1w9

Similar tritypes: 3-1-7, 1-7-3

Flavors: assertive, ambitious, attractive, and ingenious

1-7-3: These Ones are quite charming and socially adept. They are more flexible and open-minded and seek having a good time and knowing the right people. They are more selfish and less rule-bound: they have a tendency to only consider the rules that suit their goals and interests. This tritype can become a bit boastful and arrogant at times. They like having a larger group of friends that cherish them and follow their ideals.

Typical subtypes: social, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-3-7, 3-1-7

Flavors: sociable, resourceful, engaging, and self-confident

145 – The Researcher Archetype

145/154: Intuitive and knowledgeable 1. This is the most intellectual and emotional 1. This 1 is often very shy and can be torn between feelings and intellect. They're highly sensitive and tends to avoid situations that seem unmanageable. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

451/415: Knowledgeable and discerning 4. This is the most intellectual 4, especially if a social subtype or with a 5 wing. Can be shy. This 4 likes to teach and can be the more scientific 4. They can be persnickety and feels that they must know what is correct. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, and condemned.

541/514: Discerning and intuitive 5. This is the most particular 5, especially if a self-preserving subtype. This 5 tends to feel torn between rational thought and emotion. As a result, this 5 tends to hesitate and needs time to make decisions. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, and being abandoned.

Expressing Creativity

- 145s aren't known for being truly creative tritypes, but they can show it by exploring new areas of knowledge that haven't been discovered or touched upon. They are excellent at finding the missing link between two theories, or simply by researching enough on something;

Intellectual Curiosity

- 145s are often considered to be one of the most intellectual and cerebral archetypes. This is because they tend to dive deep into a subject and look for what's missing in order to make the exploration thorough and complete. Because of their capacity to amass large quantity of data, they can be known as a know-it-all;

Dealing with External Structure

- 145s prefer to work within their own boundaries and structural approaches as they color and personalize external ones in order to work with them (most of the time);

Communications skills

- 145s are not prone to be quite social, but are more sensitive to their internal life, making their conversation a bit more heartfelt at times;

Fields of Interests

- 145s love to learn about less practical subjects like science, philosophy, the occult, etc.;

Social Roles

- 145s like to dig deeper into untouched waters and make seamless links between disciplines. They are good at finding out what's missing and what's been overlooked;

Relation to Anger

- 145s don't like it when people don't follow the same rigorous steps of information gathering and analyzing as they do. They can become frustrated and nitpicky with unmotivated and sloppy people;

Personal Strengths

- 145s are the best at further refining concepts and theories in their respective framework and mapping out uncharted territories thanks to their razor-sharp intellect;

Control from the Environment

- 145s are more likely to quietly exert control over their own beliefs and what they perceive as adequate, and may try to coerce people into using the same methodology as them;

Potential Problems

- 145s can be so identified in pursuing additional knowledge and getting accurate information that this daunting task can become exhausting and leave you irritated and intolerant of outside advices. This tritype is also very critical and prone to correct others in their observations, making it frequently unliked and annoying if this attitude is persistent in time. Given that this archetype also tend to be very withdrawn and value their alone time, they should try giving others the benefit of the doubt and allow themselves to be educated freely and not only by verifiable sources;

Patterns & Structure

- 145s are triple analytical and studying. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to search a subject in depth, both intellectually and emotionally, in order to come to an accurate and detailed conclusion. They can't be satisfied with normal or readily-found data, as they want to be as precise as possible in order to develop their competency and find new info that might have been overlooked.

Self-preservation subtypes with this tritype are very withdrawn and independent, preferring to keep their interests private and often live in frugality. The 5 influence is usually very strong with this subtype since the FOUR fix here is the countertype and doesn't readily express their emotions like the other two subtypes. The ONE fix is very removed from its anger, expressing more anxiety for perfection.

Sexual subtypes are very intense and passionate, and often feel compelled to research about taboo or bizarre subjects that make them feel connected to the human body in some way. They have a combination of prickly and passionate attitude that make them quite magnetic, even though they want privacy too, like the self-preservation subtype. They love to have deep and detailed conversations with their loved ones.

Finally, social dominants with this subtype are very rigid and have a lot of shoulds about what should be actually considered correct and meaningful information. They are often interested in metaphysics and/or spiritual fields that make them feel unique and superior of some sort. They love to teach and could make a terrific college professor;

Interests:

- understanding themselves and the world
- gaining knowledge and disseminating it
- improving the world

Mission:

- gaining and spreading knowledge

Blind spots:

- overly focusing on knowledge and appearing like you are showing off your knowledge
- overly perfectionistic, making you feel anxious and tired

Fears:

- ignorance
- making mistakes
- being lonely

If you are a 145, you are diligent, intuitive, and knowledgeable. You want to be ethical, original, and wise. Highly intellectual, you are focused on what you perceive is correct and above reproach. Motivated to be informed, you are research-oriented. You seek and quote the opinions of experts to avoid being uncertain and seen as ignorant. You like to learn and will deeply study whatever captures your interest.

Your life mission is to study and learn as much as you can, and then teach the wisdom of what you have learned to others. A true researcher, you are happiest using your investigative skills. You can be so identified with the information that you have gathered and the correct way of doing things that you feel exhausted and can appear to be a persnickety know-it-all. Intellectual. May be involved in philosophy. They enjoy coming to understand themselves and their world. Very capable of intellectual circumspection with a twist of the romantic and mysterious. They seem to balance out the emotional realm with the intellectual. Cerebral, intuitive and withdrawn. Much of what we know today in any area of study is thanks to this persnickety archetype.

5 + 1 has the perceptiveness and thoroughness of the type 5 mixed with the practicality and morality of type 1, it pushes more to this cerebral aspect of both types but with more objectivity and groundedness on account of the 1.

5 + 4 has the perceptiveness and thoroughness of the type 5 mixed with the intuitiveness and sensitivity of type 4, it pushes more to this subjectivity aspect of both types also having a bit of the emotionality and meaning seeking of type 4.

Both the 451 and 459 are reserved and introspective and self-conscious. The 451 is very critical of themselves and others. They're very particular and have a lot of shoulds. They can be strident. Dissatisfaction is visible as their energy can be prickly. The 459 is more reserved and passive. They wait to be included. They are approachable, but hope that others will come towards them.

Likewise, they are quiet in their demeanor. They project a sense of stillness. Their energy is soft and yielding. Dissatisfaction is hidden like in the 479.

478 and 451 are very different types of 4. The 478 is intensely individualistic and more assertive, whereas the 451 is individualistic but much more introspective and reserved. The 478 is somewhat optimistic and focuses more on the need for inspiration than the 451. The 451 is more particular and is more motivated by gathering meaningful information that is useful.

(4)-5-1 : The Competent 4

4-(5)-1 : The Idealistic 5

4-5-(1) : The Withdrawn 1

The 514 Tritype® is more inhibited and focused on appropriateness. All 5s need to be knowledgeable. And all 5s are sensitive. So, the 1 and 4 in the 514 Tritype® increases sensitivity and the need to be knowledgeable and accurate. The 514 needs to be factual and conceptual, but also needs to be mentally and emotionally prepared as well as rehearsed before giving their opinions. This is because the 514 Tritype® has a greater sensitivity to shame than the 548 Tritype®.

514 is less exuberant, more plain outwardly, has a richer inner world, more serious, cares more about and sees the value in rules compared to 584.

154: Researcher → trying to bring his own personal findings and explorations to the world

Calling all 145s... You have reported a strong need to be above criticism and to avoid the glare of judgment and scrutiny. You have also reported how difficult it is for you to express yourself, especially if you feel emotional.

As a 415, you would need to carve a distinct image of being unique, appropriate, and wise. The three types together create a defense strategy that focuses on getting the information required 'to be correct' to feel safe. No one wants to be wrong, but this Tritype tends to easily feel self-conscious and can be shy. So, the 145 researches to have something interesting to say and to be above criticism.

514 is also anxious, especially with the 6 wing. Most particular Five, especially if SP. Tends to hesitate.

The 514 holds themselves to the same standards, but does so more from a distance. When the 5 is dominant, information becomes even more of a defense strategy. Knowledge is power and a unique perspective with diligence creates a hardworking 5 that seeks creativity. Often, artistic endeavors are kept private...especially if self-pres. The sexual/one-to-one tends to secretly pine, and the social finds small elite groups that share their interests. Many do so on the internet as there are fewer entanglements.

The 415's I know are most capable of intellectual circumspection with a twist of the romantic and mysterious. They seem to balance out the emotional realm with the intellectual, but sometimes my 415 friends can be overly critical and defiant of anything that is stereotypical or oppressive that could impact their search for an ideal mate. Another thing about the 415s I know is they are very perfectionist, overly sensitive to any perceived stereotyping, and an academically-minded four, but they never quite feel self-satisfied or finished, sometimes falling into long states of procrastination. They have an amazing ability to dissect their own emotions rationally. Think Frustration (1-4) meets Competence (1-5) meets Withdrawing (4-5), and you get a rather persnickety perfectionist who needs plenty of downtime. On the high side, what they produce can be of unparalleled depth and beauty.

Out of 458/459/451, I'd guess that both 459 and 451 would seem more 5-like (or, more accurately, be more likely to be mistyped as 5) than 458.

The foremost 145 in my experience is an old friend of mine: a 4w5-5w6-1w9 SO/SP. He has the guiltiest conscience of anyone I've known. He doesn't chide himself for doing evil so much as his superego haunts him like something morbid and ghastly, like an Edgar Allen Poe narrative, for behaving inconsistently with his values. Even minor and practically inconsequential transgressions of this kind are amplified in his imagination. He has it bad. When he was 13, he was described as "13, going on 21" so serious and conscientious at such a young age. Outwardly, he's glum, droll, biting.

I'm a sp/so 4w5, and had strong moments of "reckless/dauntless" stuff, that sometimes sound like 8. The "flaming" of a 4 can also sometimes look like 8. Also, so4 individualist "honor" is close to 8.

Finally, my gut fixation in tritype is 1, and it took me a lot of time to see it. To see it, I need to be quite balanced (not melancholic), and it showed through the following:

- Perfectionist: especially in trying many solutions to find the best one: leave no stone unturned. It sometimes turns a little obsessive and counter-productive.
- Having a quite "discrete" attitude of controlling people to a proper behavior, and a desire to educate them (though my 4 and 5 both don't like this idea very much)
- A strong desire for precision and accuracy in the things that I write, checking my words several times
- A message coming from the gut saying "I'm a good person"
- Strong "good boy/good student" tendency
- Elitist in art (4+5+1), rather idealist
- I like rules (making them, improving them, trying to convince people to agree with them and comply to them) in the things that matter to me, otherwise I can be very much of a rebel.
- Being upset when someone/something interrupts you while doing an activity in which you are pretty invested? i.e: I get abnormally upset when I'm listening to an album or watching a film, and then I'm interrupted/asked to do something.

- Wanting everything to fit so badly that you can go out of your way just so it does? (and being unsatisfied with the results anyway) i.e: I used to listen to music while I was in the bus, but I wanted to be on a specific point on the song, exactly when I'm arriving to my destination.

- Having a ridiculous fixation with perfection, even with minor/unimportant activities? i.e: The other day I was playing Resident Evil 4 and I had such an urge to do a whole playthrough without losing any health (super stupid, I know) that it eventually turned into an unpleasant experience :(

- Not taking any particular side when you're listening to your friends having a discussion. You get the point of what everyone is saying, but you feel like you need to have more information on the subject before getting into it? In more unhealthy times, this is a more global, fuzzy resentment against the world and people for not being more perfect.

- Being anxious/feeling alienated in uncontrolled environments?

I used to get completely out of control with anger very frequently, but as soon as I calmed down, I'd get frustrated with how irrationally and counter-productively I'd been behaving. That is such a classic One response to their outbursts. Almost immediate frustration (self-beating up, large or small). And the particular words chosen to explain why she was frustrated with herself: irrational and counter-productive. But now that I'm thinking about it, the One frustration about the outbursts at average levels also come with a strong sense of guilt (when they see how other people respond to them). And this definitely holds for the 5-4-1.

451 is the most 5-ish 4. Rational and scientific.

The three least 'flexible' fixes. Might be perceived as somewhat dour & joyless, but also probably the most functional/productive of the 3. 5-1 combo makes an inexpressive, very precision focused person; 4-1 tends to be 'critic-like'

The 514 Tritype® does not see themselves or describe themselves as fussy, pretentious, and fastidious. In fact, these words are antithetical to the 514 Tritype®. Nor are they “highly demanding of their environment.” Instead, the 514 is trying to be unseen in their environment in order to be able to study and observe people and situations without being seen...so standing out is not a part of the type 5s defense strategy. However, what is accurate is that this 514 Tritype® is highly intellectual with an amplified need to be logical, rational, and methodical.

Some paragraphs below are closer to the key features of the 514 Tritype®. But the negative comments are irrelevant as any type that is unhealthy could behave in a critical, rejecting manner and is not indicative of type or Tritype®.

“Idealistic and principled,” is true of these 5s, but “very criticizing and rejecting of people and situations that do not meet their standards – many would call them fastidious.” is describing behaviors rather than motivations, and is truer of the 614 Tritype® than the 514 Tritype®.

“To a certain extent, they believe themselves to be superior and different from others—misunderstood but brilliant. Indeed, their intellect, insight, logical thinking, as well as their physical and emotional fragility contribute to an overly cerebral image.”

This 514 Tritype® is definitely more inhibited and self-conscious, as well as private, and intellectual (5,4) and idealistic (1,4) and insightful (5,4). The 514 Tritype® is focused and thorough due to the (1,5,4) arrogant and condescending reactions rather than superior (5,4). Accurate, right, and correct (5,4,1) and more focused on their own idea of ethics than other 5s because of the (1,4) and (1,5).

So, the 514 Tritype® is the Tritype® that is most inclined to over-prepare (5,1) and fall into a style of response that is characterized by delays due to the inhibitions (5,1,4) and perfectionist qualities that emerge as a result of the shared values that are amplified. The 514 Tritype® hesitates and may anxiously continue to gather information and delay taking action. However, what is meaningful and noteworthy, is that the 514 Tritype® combines the 5s analytical complexity with the 4s emotional complexity, but they struggle with taking action due to the combination of the (1,5,4). The reason for this is due to the amplifications of the (4,1) line.

At first, I thought this wasn't my tritype, but eventually I came to the conclusion that it actually is, because I relate a lot to the 1 and 5 fixes. 415 can be weird. You want authenticity, but you also seek for perfection in everything you do so it makes it hard to express yourself properly, because you want everything to be that good. That's why I always get stuck when I try to do anything, and then I feel like * because nothing is good enough for me. It is such fixation that sometimes it can look like OCD (which I have, btw). I know everyone is different with regard to this, but I want to test something; does any 415 relate to any of these situations?

451 – knowledgeable and discerning 4. Most intellectual 4, especially if social subtype with a 5 wing. Likes to teach.

I'm a 514, and one of my friends is a 549. We're similar, but because of my 1 fix, I am more prone to correcting others and speaking my mind. Not condescendingly, but more of a "I think it will help you if you knew about this" tone of voice. But I'm also kinda strict, I guess? Some people think I'm too serious, but my close friends know I'm pretty goofy. People tell me I seem strict and "lack a sense of humor" which is probably because I usually only open that part of me to people who can handle the totality of me.

451 "The Researcher": You want to be right, and you want to be correct more than anything. You will tirelessly seek out knowledge and information, but can be so focused on what you know that you can easily become a know-it-all without realizing it. Leading with 4 makes you more likely to view criticism from others as just another sign you are on the right path, but the 1 also makes you sensitive to the possibility that you are in fact not in the right path. You are so sensitive to and afraid of the possibility of being wrong that when you have made up your mind about something, you may stubbornly defend your opinion. Try to remember that not everything will have a clear answer, and your truth may not be everyone's truth.

"This tritype may come off reserved to the extreme and seem the most "5ish" especially if the 4 has a 5 wing as well, due to the two types, 5 and 1 being very reserved types. 1 is reserved because they feel they need self-control, whereas 5 is reserved because they don't want to be emotionally involved, and both of these war with the inherent emotional richness of the 4 enneagram type. They may be very staunch at first, but 1, although a very self-controlled type, is a passionate type as well. This will mix with the type 4 in this tritype, giving them a creative, inspirational drive, while also maintaining a somewhat detached lens on life. They will seem to withdraw and spontaneously engage with reality, off in their own little world, quite literally. Though they may seem very serious, their opinions and reflections on things and interpretations may come off as very odd or artistically inclined, possibly metaphor heavy, or just generally laden with emotion, though their appearance would be deceiving. Fairly realistic perspectives. A more introverted tritype.”

Five with a one fix: focused, serious tone. Critical outlook. Theme of sacrifice, dissolves wholly into their projects. Special interest in knowledge, skill, and discoveries to improve health, society, the future, and the like. Concerned for others in the abstract; difficult to get close to.

If you want to spot a 4-1-5:

They're likely to make some kind of unique statement aesthetically. (Most likely on their person, but if not there then in some other artistic outlet. Look for it.) Probably seem contemplative or broody...or even depressive. (Unless they're an unhealthy 4w3—then their emotions will just be on display all over the place.)

They'll likely be perfectionistic (possibly even to the extent of some level of OCD). Likely have very strong moral or personal values/beliefs. Will hold themselves to high standards, but possibly feel they fail these standards and beat themselves up over it.

Will be more so emotional creatures than intellectual, but will have a noticeable value for knowledge and can be a hoarder of knowledge on certain topics that are important to them for personal reasons

I am a 451.

For me, the 4 brings an emotional depth, a well. However, I often can't feel these emotions directly. Dealing with emotions follows this pattern:

1. Intellectualize them, rationalize them.
2. Identify the flaw or source (what caused this? Is it something I can fix?). Usually I determine this 'flaw' to be a personal deficiency.
3. Take steps to 'fix' the issue, even if the issue doesn't actually exist beyond my personal perception.

Either it follows that 3-step pattern, or I will go to bed completely depressed and exhausted. The next day, my thirst for knowledge (5) and harsh self-imposed standards (1,4) will draw me out of bed and force me to study / work. Sometimes my emotions are too strong, though, and instead of working, I first have to express them by screaming and grinding my guitar with extreme distortion. Or writing.

I feel I need to be a polymath, and being bad at anything makes me depressed. So I study and study, and work extremely hard until I'm good enough at something to be satisfied.

For example, two months ago, I realized my scope of knowledge was limited to the English world. I didn't know any foreign languages, and ever since then I have been studying the crap out of Japanese. I figured if I could tackle the hardest language for English speakers first, everything else would become easier, and I'd have more confidence and motivation.

As you can see, insecurity → need for research → intense studying → satisfaction

And in the emotional realm, insecurity → self-pity → depression → emotional expression → satisfaction.

Perhaps my defining characteristic is that I never feel complete. Something's always missing: knowledge, skills, personality, passion, etc.

Hopefully this was relatable for other, similar, personalities.

I'd like to talk more about this tritype, since I've exhausted all the available resources. I'd like to hear whatever you have to say, even if tangential or unrelated.

However, I'd be especially grateful if you could answer these questions:

1. How does 1, 4, and 5 manifest in your personality?
2. What do you like to study / do?
3. What are some major life lessons you've learned?
4. What do you love about yourself? What do you hate?
5. Do you relate to this title: 'The Researcher'?

Replies

514, or a presumed one anyway. Very good type for sitting around ruminating, less so for actually getting anywhere in life. Not quickly, anyway.

1. 5... well, I'm a fairly stereotypical five. Academically successful (practical intelligence is another matter), used to have entire encyclopedias memorized as a kid, but I simply don't do people. At all. 1 is... rather binary, in practice. On the one hand, I have quite a few principles that I stick to despite freely admitting how they're quite irrational (though, considering Hume's Guillotine, aren't all principles such?), not that I've ever had the opportunity to find out if I'd still stick to them if they were truly inconvenient. And there's certainly a part of me that suspects I really wouldn't like the answer to that. On the other, more negative, side, there's the tendency towards schadenfreude—I love it when people's stupidity, cruelty and greed blow up in their faces—and a tendency towards feeling like I just know I'm right and the other side's wrong even if, objectively, there just isn't all that much evidence. 4 comes off as a childish fondness towards coming off as “quirky” and “unique” at times (for example, I did a super villain laugh as a teenager long enough that it stuck and is now my natural laugh—one of them, anyway. Hey, it's fun to do.), with an extra helping of self-deprecating humor.
2. Like... well, Redditor standard fare. Video games, reading. Learning a few languages (French, Russian, German) but I feel like I got just a wee bit too ambitious there. Focused research only if there's a specific goal, otherwise I just keep the net cast and what catches, catches.

3. Well, planning to try to come out of my shell and interact with the world more got well and truly ruined by the quarantine, so I learned the world won't wait for me forever. Unfortunately, can't exactly apply that yet, what with the pandemic still an ongoing concern.
4. I think the answers to question 1 should tell quite enough on this subject, no?
5. As I am now? Not... all that much, no. As an ideal I could live up to, if I managed to rid myself of... well, quite a few character flaws? Much more appealing.

I am a 514 and INFJ.

1. I am observant, quiet, intelligent, and in my head like a 5. I have a strong moral compass and always try to do the right thing like a 1. I want to have significance like a 4.
2. I like to study psychology, philosophy, and grammar. I like to read, write, and research.
3. I have learned to not care what other people think and that worrying is pointless. I am currently trying to learn to be less serious and have fun.
4. I like how observant and emotionally intelligent I am. I dislike how quickly my social battery drains.
5. Yes, I love researching various topics.

I am somewhere between 514 and 541 (I have Sp4 in my tritype, which means that it looks like I have another E1 fix within me). In my case, I am a So5w6 core, which means that I seek to look to the stars for the elixir of ideals, which means that I implicitly have an animosity towards the regular world. I search for people who have similar intellectual ideals to myself (Transhumanism). I set to gather the most information about my ideals and to gain as much knowledge from encyclopedias and books as possible. My So1 fix comes from how I want to use my skills and abilities to gain order into the world, to which I have this ideal vision of what I want the world to be and the reasons of which I want to incite change. As for my Sp4 fix, it is also very idealistic, but it holds a deeply sensitive side to it that nobody can really find while looking at me from the outside. I mainly conceal my suffering from the external world. My 4 fix contributes to my idealism and is very E1 like.

1-4-5: A rather introverted and withdrawn One, more creative, original, and abstract than most. Prefers the realm of imagination and has very high ideals and standards, especially in what concerns romantic relationships. They're harder to get to know because they can be very reserved, moody, and somewhat picky. They have artistic inclinations and can be quite whimsical and creative. Tend to feel overwhelmed by the real world and hide in their own perfect worlds of fantasy. Prone to bouts of existential depression.

Usual subtypes: self-preserving, sexual, 1w9

Similar tritypes: 1-5-4, 4-1-5

Flavors: solitary, melancholic, critical, and whimsical

1-5-4: A reserved, cerebral, and fairly intuitive One, who has a preference for the realm of the thought and the abstract. They can be very theoretical and philosophical and like to be alone and ponder things for a long time. They have a developed imagination and a deep insight into the nature of things and people. Mainly isolationists, they have a tendency towards sparseness and austerity, and are generally economical and even avaricious. At times experience gloomy moods which they strangely enjoy.

Usual subtypes: self-preserving, 1w9

Similar tritypes: 1-4-5, 5-1-4

Flavors: theoretical, philosophical, hoarding, and insightful

5-4-1: These Fives are perhaps the most typical of this type's usual description – they're withdrawn, imaginative, ingenious, detail-oriented, and sensitive. Very intelligent and creative but also somewhat capricious, fussy, and impractical, they have explicit standards of intellectual ability and artistic taste and tend to reject and ridicule anything and anyone that doesn't rise up to them. Typical isolationists who feel misunderstood by society, they hide in their ivory tower of ideas and ideals, abstractly reconstructing reality according to their own terms.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, sexual, 5w4

Similar tritypes: 4-5-1, 1-5-4

Flavors: individualistic, elegant, inventive, and nit-picking

5-1-4: These Fives stand out by being rather fussy—they're pretentious and perfectionist and can be highly demanding of their environment. Idealistic and principled, these Fives can be very criticizing and rejecting of people and situations that do not meet their standards – many would call them fastidious. To a certain extent, they believe themselves to be superior and different from others—misunderstood but brilliant. Indeed, their intellect, insight, and logical thinking, as well as their physical and emotional fragility contribute to an overly cerebral image.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, 5w4, 5w6

Similar tritypes: 1-5-4, 5-4-1

146 – The Philosopher Archetype

146/164: Intuitive and inquisitive 1. This 1 is very reactive, moody, and easily flustered. This 1 has very strong emotions and morals, especially if a social subtype. Inclined to voice feelings and standards, this 1 has double access to 4 so is creative, but the 6 needs to know the guidelines. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

461/416: Inquisitive and discerning 4. This is the traditional and rule-oriented 4 and can appear to be a 6 or 1. Can be persnickety and run high anxiety like 6, especially if a social subtype. Often teachers, they enjoy teaching the nuances of any subject that interests them. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned.

641/614: Discerning and intuitive 6. This is the most particular 6. The 6 is creative, especially with the 7 wing. They can be torn between the need for meaning and need to be dutiful and responsible. This 6 is typically drawn to teaching. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, and being abandoned.

Expressing Creativity

- 146s are very intuitive and can use their creativity by seeking original solutions to a problem that hasn't been looked thoroughly at before. They are also humanitarian in that they truly want to help people find what's intrinsically valuable about them and how to cultivate each's own potential;

Intellectual Curiosity

- 146s are more people and certainty-oriented than 145s. While they do also possess a large intellectual appetite, their quest for knowledge entails looking for guidelines or truisms in order to get accurate and meaningful information, so they can get to the truth behind it;

Dealing with External Structure

- 146s is the most comfortable out of the three ONE+FOUR combinations when dealing with external methods and structures to seek out their truth about something. That doesn't mean that they won't question the actual veracity and usefulness of said system;

Leadership Style

- 146s prefer a more behind-the-scene type of leadership and like to take the role of an adviser over the one of a commander;

Anxiety Management

- 146s reduce their anxiety by questioning the underlying reasons that cause them to be anxious in the first place. They are thus able to better predict and anticipate future anxiety episodes by doing this;

Sensitivity

- 146s are sensitive to the impact that they have on others and the significance behind it all. They are also very sensitive to their own doubts and making the right choice;

Emotional Expression

- 146s are less expressive than 468 & 469 because of the ONE's distrust of emotions in general, making them more critical and frustrated with unplanned actions and/or careless behavior;

Activity

- 146s are also careful, but are also a bit more confident in taking action when needed. They need the right structure and procedure to do so;

Dealing with Own Anxiety

- 146s can ease out their anxiety by looking at what could be corrected and taken care of in order to straighten up their environment by establishing rules based on personal values;

Potential Problems

- 146s often have the tendency to challenge and put in question every tidbit of information that seems off or too superficial according to them. While they might refrain from saying what they've got in mind in fear of appearing impolite or annoying, this can make them very critical and judging of other's opinions and make other people turn their back against their numerous advices. This is problematic because they only wish to prevent them from making erroneous judgments and putting themselves into hot waters. This tripe may reconsider their communication style and reduce the amount of advices and opinions that they give out in light of all this;

Patterns & Structure

- 146s are triple critical and judging. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to submit external information to their inner critic in order to form an opinion about it and subsequently approve or dismiss it. While they are typically seen as negative and pessimistic in their attempt to analyze the world, they actually possess tremendous wisdom and want to use it in such a way that would prevent people from experiencing pain, distress, and/or being careless with their talents.

The self-preservation subtype is very much concerned with tangible and financial security above all. The FOUR component is a little less outwardly seen here, as the ONE+SIX combination naturally enhances the security and anxiety aspect. This is the most prudent and reasonable 146 archetype.

The sexual variant is more concerned about how to anticipate and prevent emotional ruin that consumes people, and therefore make excellent therapists and life coaches. They are usually very sensitive to emotional bonds they create and maintain, and can get very controlling at times if they feel that this link is in danger of being severed. I believe that the 146 tritype mixed with the sexual variant gives a very protective and emotional pairing, akin to the 468. There may be a strong need to improve others by being intrusive and critical of those who are close at heart.

Social subtypes of this tritype are usually involved in social groups or organizations that cater to the need of some type of individuals, often folks that are marginalized, hurt or can't help themselves;

Interests:

- want to be safe and prepared
- discussing thoughts and feelings

Mission:

- understanding truth and value and helping others find it

Blind spots:

- very concerned with what you think is ethical, coming across as overly critical
- getting overwhelmed
- asking too much of yourself

Fears:

- boredom
- doubt
- being unloved and alone
- being wrong

If you are a 146, you are diligent, intuitive, and inquisitive. You want to be ethical, original, and certain. Morally focused, you have strong emotions and are inclined to voice your feelings and intuitions. You care deeply and want to help others improve their lives and the expectations they have of themselves. You try to find the best philosophy that matches who you are in your world view, and use it as your guide.

Blind Spot: The blind spot is that they can be so identified with what they perceive is the morally correct way of being that they can come across as overly prudish, rigid and inflexible. When they feel insecure, they can be overly critical of themselves and others and appear to be a snob.

Growing Edge: The growing edge is to recognize that authenticity is not cultivated. Their inclination is to create a sense of self around an identity of being informed and educated. Sophistry is a mimic of being. True awareness comes from being present to the moment, rather than developing an image of being 'in the know'.

Your life mission is to find truth and help others understand what has intrinsic value. A true philosopher, you are happiest when you can use your intuition to help others find meaning. This type is somewhat neurotic. Perfectionist. May push themselves beyond their physical capability. At the same time, they tend to believe themselves to be better than most. Fussy, but incredibly insightful.

6 core + a strong secondary 1 fix creates high rigidity/uptightness and an extremely categorical, black-and-white outlook on moral issues

6 by nature is questioning and doubting, but 1 fix is supremely uncomfortable with uncertainty and lack of structure. 6+1 tends to want to understand a concept or scenario at 100% with no stone left unturned. When there's uncertainty along the way, or when something doesn't quite fit or make sense, the 6+1 feels mental discord and needs to put everything neatly in a structured place. 6+1's become extremely frustrated when things are inaccurate or flaky. 6 is always questioning discrepancies, but what it really wants is to be able to yield to something that's actually true and finally stop asking questions. With 1 fix, there's no room for ambiguity. 1 as a frustration type pulls 6 into the place where it is dissatisfied with its own thinking process and needs to refine it.

As for careers, they can be very good at creative writing and refining any type of art so that it can reflect their own standards.

146s of all core types tend to be poised and prudent, almost as though they were consulting with their inner critic to have each word screened before it passes their lips. When you're conversing with them, there's always a third party present: the judge. It can seem like they're always standing at attention. They're also oddly picky about minutiae in most (if not all) areas of life, almost as though they were looking for little things to be picky about.

This is very true of the 146s I know. They can be so moralistic. The so/sp is even more prudent. I think Katherine says they are really hard on themselves. They are the most critical of the tritype combinations. They expect a lot from themselves and others. I feel for them.

461: Inquisitive and discerning 4. Most compliant and rule-oriented 4. 6ish. Tends to run high anxiety, especially if self-preserving.

David Fauvre also said that 461's have a bit of a 'bite' to them.

The 486 is much more assertive than the 416. The 416, 459, and 469 all struggle with painful self-consciousness and inhibition. The 461 tends to be very critical of themselves to avoid being criticized. This tritype is very particular. The 416 hesitates and the 486 impulsively reacts. A perceived threat to the primary instinct triggers this tritype.

Any combination that has a 6 runs anxiety. Any tritype that has self-pres as the dominant instinct is motivated by anxiety. The tritypes that tend to run high anxiety are the 614 and 694... and then 629 and 639.

I think this is probably my tritype. I don't like to mix the things I talk with my psychiatrist, but I remember him telling me that one of the things I had to work on is that I have a "judge" that harshly judges myself and others. This also makes me very anxious.

Tentative but full of convictions. Dreamy, yet sharply focused. Suspicious, and very specific and detail oriented. Yearns to be accepted and fit in among others yet feels they don't fit in, and can be ridiculed. Focuses and hones in on mistakes, even if they don't matter, of their own or others. More of an introverted tritype. Takes pride in being different yet also may feel attacked for it.

Tightly wound. Anxious. Somewhat torn between conforming to avoid being singled out, and acting as outrageously as possible to define their individuality. 4 seeks out what they identify with, whereas 6 is confused as to what they do identify with, so there may be a constant internal war of “Who am I?” and “This is who I am!” only to have “Who am I?” reoccur the very next day. Supportive, though they can seem very nitpicky towards what doesn’t seem to matter due to the 1 in the tritype. Undue suspicion, “That statement could be interpreted differently...are they hiding something from me?” Regardless, they are good at sniffing the truth out, be it imagined or true. Defensive of what they believe in, and have detailed arguments to prove it, aided by 1 and time thought out. This tritype is a person of passion and convictions.

(4)-6-1 : The Compliant 4

4-(6)-1 : The Idealistic 6

4-6-(1) : The Reactive 1

641, and he's a perennial hothead who does a fair bit of ranting

I'd been assuming I was a 4-6-9, but I didn't relate to hardly any of the 9 keywords. Am I calm? Patient? No way! I'm the total opposite. To my surprise, I related more to the 1 and even the 8 keywords. My sheet of self-description had a lot of 9-y things on it, but I really don't feel like a 9. We all had a bit of trouble figuring it out for me because of that, but we settled on 4-6-1, because I relate so much to the 'self-controlled' and all that, have an extremely loud superego, and am always worrying about whether I'm doing the right thing. And it really explains so much. Most of why I act so much like a 9 is because my superego is constantly pressuring me to. You wouldn't think that a 4-6-9 would be told so constantly that I “don't know how to relax.” As a kid, I wasn't 9ish at all. I acted like a 4, 6, or 1 all the time. I have a strong compliant, conventional, and 'obey the rules' streak. My 6 has got to be almost purely phobic because I don't react like a 6, although I have anxiety and doubt to boot (I joke about being a 'phobic 4' sometimes). I've often felt like I was a superego type and a really strong frustration type, and that explains it. That explains why I feel so much like I'm trapped in a cage and beating my wings against the bars, which is a feeling my type and stacking and wing didn't seem to fully explain. No wonder I didn't see much in trifix theory before—I was assigning myself the wrong one. It was a huge surprise. And god, it's a relief.

1-4-6: Fear of desperateness, dullness, and doubt. Tendency to seek things they will accept. Poignancy and assurance.

When the 4 and 6 are in the tritype, there is more negativity as a strategy to prevent making a mistake that will bring shame, blame, and criticism. This is most true of the 461 and then 468 and then the 469.

(From InsightfulInnovations: [146] philosophy is centered around the belief that people should be honest, hard-working, tasteful, and, well...strive for perfection.

The Six in his tritype exacerbates the appearance of phobias. Jeff [Lewis] is likely the 164 tritype which heightens his emotional reactivity (both Fours and Sixes are reactive types) and creates a more persnickety personality style. As a One, Jeff channels his persnickety nature into keeping extreme order, efficiency, and practicality in his work and home life. However, with the Four thrown in, he ends up behaving a bit like a frustrated diva when things aren't done to his specifications.

416 or 461 tritype: The most conscientious 4. Frequently uses art as a social/philosophical statement. May think of themselves as ascetics—indulging their emotionally-masochistic tendencies with the belief that they deserve nothing and that beating themselves up will make them a better person. More likely than other 4s to engage the outside world for the sake of espousing their ideals rather than retreating from it

1-4-6 tritype in any order: This tritype is characterized by a highly observant and conscientious nature. They can be described as cantankerous optimists—prone to frequent complaining due to their deep faith that everything could always be better. Despite their anxiety and melancholy, they are capable of deep wisdom and compassion. Their downfall is often the stringent standards they impose on themselves and their lives, as it can impede their efficacy. These individuals need to learn that life rewards action rather than perfectionism. They tend to be spiritual and contemplative of ethics. They are typically creative and drawn to life/career paths that allow them to better the world around them while expressing their individual views and selves.

Core Triggers: Feeling wrong, inadequate, and/or uncertain.

614 The Philosopher. Discerning and intuitive 6. This is the most particular 6. This 6 is very creative, especially with the 7 wing. They can be torn between the need for meaning and the need to be dutiful and responsible. This 6 is typically drawn to teaching.

Anxiety and worry increase with the 1 and doubt and uncertainty with the 9. Examine your motivations rather than your behaviors. This is especially difficult for the 6, but more so for the 649 as all 3 types tend to doubt as a defense strategy. This is the Tritype that is most reluctant to take a stand for their “own” opinion until they are angry. The 641 has all 3 types that fear making a mistake and being at risk for having done so. They tend to be more likely to show frustration and to correct and instruct others (especially for the so 641).

Your descriptions sound more like sp1 in the gut. As a sp6, you have a natural line of connection to sp9. Research has shown that you move to your wings and lines of connection, with the same dominant instinct running the show. When your sp6 moves to sp9 and sp3, it is momentary and adding to your sp6. When you shift in your tritype your sp6 shifts to the 1 for solutions and runs all permutations of the 1 driven by the needs and concerns of the self-pres. The confusion may be that sp1 worries much like a 6, but the focus is on improving. So your instinct may have made it more difficult to land on the 614. Take your time. The 694 is much more hidden and inhibited. The 641 is focused on the perfecting and refining...getting it right.

Both 4s and 6s can be emotional. The question is what are you emotional about? In terms of difficult behaviors...

641: particular, fussy

Compliance (1-6) meets frustration (1-4) meets intensity (4-6). Very anxiety-prone combination ("stressure"). High-strung perfectionists who strongly value the "correct" way of doing things. On the high side, they often make excellent teachers of the arts or anything they're passionate about.

I see the fix as somewhat harmonious. Six and Four share reactivity. Six and One share compliance. Four and One share DOI/DOD (direction of integration and disintegration). Regarding respective (emotional) triadic roles, One represents repression, Four introversion, and Six ambiversion/ambivalence. If anything, I think this trifix would result in a kind of over-obedience and lack of spontaneity/open-endedness. A less "extraverted" gestalt 146 – There is also a "zeal" for action for this type, but it will realize much earlier if what they're doing has no real meaning and will look for something else. They still might feel that they've "sold out" just to ensure security and doing the "right" thing. They need to trust what they intuitively sense and act accordingly, and learn to do this with others. i.e., they must trust what others feel is right for themselves and gives these people room to do that despite the very strong intuitions of this tritype.

"146, 468, and 469 all share a hypersensitivity to negative feedback, whether it's blame, shame, or judgement. Criticism is taken directly personally (4) and responded with some degree of emotional reactivity (6). Katharine Faurve made an amusing analogy of 4s: while most people would try to avoid arrows being shot at them, a 4 would actually catch an arrow flying at them and use it to stab themselves. This imagery pretty much depicts how criticism is received."

The 146 Tritype® is focused on their sensitivity to pressure, and their need to always "get it right," so they will express empathy by helping to find and implement accurate and specific solutions in a caring way.

1-4-6: These Ones are quite imaginative, creative, and a bit melancholic. They are extreme perfectionists and can easily feel discouraged and let down by the imperfect world around them. They don't easily trust others and tend to avoid society, but at the same time they crave being loved and belonging. Likewise, they also have a bit of a temper, so their anger can show, especially when feeling misunderstood. They tend to support the underdog, and they can have a passionate, belligerent streak to them.

Usual subtypes: sexual, social, 1w2

Flavors: imaginative, passionate, suspicious, and sensitive

1-6-4: Very dutiful and faithful, but also prone to angry reactions and, rarely, depression bouts in isolation. This is a more anxious One that finds it harder to hide his anger and his concern with the loyalty and reliability of those around. Can experience strong like/dislike feelings about people and situations, and is more suspicious and prejudiced towards newcomers and different groups. They are typically traditionalists, but will at times go against tradition in a rather rebellious way, especially when insecure.

Similar tritypes: 6-1-4, 1-4-6

147 – The Visionary Archetype

147/174: Intuitive and innovative 1. This is the most creative and idealistic 1. This 1 is moody and expressive and is most inclined to identify with the line of 4, especially if a sexual subtype. Feels the need to create and maintain standards of excellence. The core fears are of being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

471/417: Innovative and discerning 4. This is the most idealistic 4. This 4 is the most inclined to be a teacher, as they love to inspire and educate in a sensitive and creative way. In spite of being upbeat, this 4 tends to be moody and highly critical of themselves. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible and condemned.

741/714: Discerning and intuitive 7. This is the most idealistic 7. A true visionary, the 7 wants to manifest what is possible. Inclined to vacillate between the need for depth and the need for order, this 7 can easily feel frustrated and emotional. Can be judgmental and mistaken for a 1 or 4. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, being wrong, bad, evil, angry, inappropriate, corruptible, condemned, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, and being abandoned.

Gut: 1 Heart: 4 Head: 7

Expressing Creativity

- 147s are one of the most creative tritypes and often show this magical quality by pushing their limits to create something unprecedented and truly original;

Intellectual Curiosity

- 147s are in love with the unconventional and out of the ordinary, and therefore can seek to continuously replicate a sense of wonder in their heart and mind. This archetype wants to establish firm but also pliable mental structures in order to shape out their vision without altering the uniqueness factor too much;

Dealing with External Structure

- 147s is a bit at odds with external systems. They like that it can help to define and standardize terms and metrics, but it can also negatively affect the quality and purity of their work;

Emotional Rapproches

- 147s often want a special and unique relationship in which they can share their inner thoughts and emotions;

Productivity Levels

- 147s are often erratic in their productivity levels since they are prone to mood swings and bouts of melancholy because they are sometimes overfocusing on their internal needs;

Creativity

- 147s are very creative in the most classic sense of the word, meaning that they often have artistic flair to their senses and know how to transform an ordinary work to an unusual piece;

Expressing Creativity

- 147s want their ideas and projects to match their ideals perfectly, and thus can be overly focused on details and consequently stuck on the developing part for too long;

Independence

- 147s express their independence by insisting on achieving new standards of excellence and adhering to internal rules in order to create something in a perfect and novel fashion;

Activity

- 147s are active if they have a certain structure in mind in order to sort out their ideas and arrange them to their liking; chaos is quite disturbing for them;

Potential Problems

- 147's ideas and goals can be so out there and original that they can be considered farfetched and unrealistic to an outsider's eye. While this archetype can see what's missing and know how to implement structure and set out goals to reach what they envision, they often skip important details and stay engrossed into their own imagination without considering the actual facts that they might see as boring and/or obstructing. Also, this tritype is not known to be easy to work with because of their very high standards and moody or unpredictable attitude, which can be problematic when they work on an extended project or in teams;

Patterns & Structure

- 147s are triple idealistic and vision. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to look past the initial expectation of a product or a concept and develop it further, pushing its boundaries to create something unique, novel, and exceptional. Whatever the subtype, they are passionate in what they do and don't want to have put any limit to their creativity besides their own.

Self-preservation variant are mellower than the other two subtypes and can be a bit more down-to-earth. They like to entertain and are creative hard workers who can still be quite perfectionistic because of the ONE fix.

Sexual subtype with this archetype is truly an intense combination that is extremely passionate and imaginative. They dream big and want to do big, too. The ONE+FOUR combination here is quite amplified with the fiery touch of the one-to-one variant. They can be very controlling and finicky when they get a picture of what they want to produce.

Finally, the social subtype is more socially aware and often has a political or societal message behind their work. The ONE side is typically stronger here because of the counter-gluttony SEVEN with this instinct. This can make them more willing to follow rules and teach people about how to use their vision and creative talents;

Interests:

- finding and fighting for ideals
- has two different faces
- wanting to match others

Mission:

- finding creative ways to improve the world and others

Blind spots:

- overly focused on ideals, coming across as inflexible and critical
- finding it hard to strike a balance between being extroverted and expressive and introverted and reserved

Fear:

- not making a difference

If you are a 147, you are diligent, intuitive, and innovative. You want to be ethical, expressive, and positive. You are passionate and idealistic. Likewise, you want to make a difference in the world and see the many possible approaches to different situations. Perfectionistic, you seek standards that improve lives. Your ideal vision of life is a utopia that everyone will contribute to and live by.

The Visionary is original, intellectual, and motivated to cause change. Morally focused, then, tend to have big ideas and strong will to change the world around them. They tend to want to try to do something new, set a trend, or otherwise be as original as possible in their ideas. They are very intuitive and extremely creative.

The blind spot is that the identification with the high ideals can create a sense of being inflexible in standards and rigid. This is the type most likely to alternate between being the life of the party and feeling inhibited and needing to be appropriate.

The life mission is to visualize ways to create meaningful change and teach or inspire others toward higher values of excellence. They are highly opportunistic and focused on vision, creativity, and the magical. Your emotional energy goes towards seeking ideal relationships and circumstances. You want fulfilling experiences, relationships, and environments. You tend to be fussy and easily frustrated and/or disenchanted with less than ideal relationships or situations. Likewise, you are quite discriminating and tend to compare yourself to others. Overall, you want a sense of idealistic perfection.

“I experience myself as being intensely idealistic and perfectionistic. I also experience a lot of internal tension from having both 7 and 1 in my tritype. Sometimes I allow myself to be bold, playful, and uninhibited, and other times I feel very serious, reserved, and self-conscious. I'm still pretty optimistic for a 4, and I think the future can and certainly should be better than it is and that there's a way to get there. I find myself to be frustrated with present circumstances, though.”

Yeah, what you wrote above really echoes what Katherine has found with the 471. It is the most idealistic of all the tritypes having all 3 idealists. This is the type that is both diligent, creative, and intuitive. She said the blind spot is that the identification with the high ideals can create a sense of being inflexible in standards and rigid. She also said this is the type most likely to alternate between being the life of the party and feeling inhibited and needing to be appropriate. The life mission is to visualize ways to create meaningful change and teach or inspire others toward higher values of excellence.

The line between ONE and SEVEN links two opposite concepts together: the ONE part needs to shape and refine its environment to its specific standards (control) and the SEVEN part emphasizes the need to explore the numerous sensations and be mentally stimulated by them. When ONE and SEVEN meet in a tritype, they automatically bring out those two opposite forces front and center, thus the individual can be torn between the need for control and chaos. This can bring a lot of anxiety and irritation since when they want to indulge and enjoy what their environment has to offer (SEVEN), they can't seem to be able to completely let go and relax because of the ONE's sense of duty and strong superego. On the other hand, if they want to build and make something worthy of their time (ONE), the SEVEN energy jumps in telling them that it must be enjoyable and fun in order for the mind to be completely invested in it. While we could argue that every tritype brings about this kind of push-pull energy at times, this is really amplified with this ONE-SEVEN line and even more so with the 147 tritype precisely because of the additional need for FOUR to create something meaningful and deep.

The 7 is what allows you to be bold (and the 4) but that 1 in there creates a stronger superego that likely says "you must be good, ethical, right, and appropriate" so there will be a clamping down of the spontaneous energy. With a 3 wing and social subtype, I would imagine this person would be very productive and inclined to stay busy in order to avoid the inevitable emotional flood of the 4. With a 5 wing, there might be more of an interest in academic or intellectual pursuits.

4 and 7 together combine to create a sense of being creative, intuitive, magical, and imaginative.

The 471 and the 479 are both focused on the vision, creativity, and the magical. The difference is in the gut center. The 471 has 3 types with access to 1, so are very critical of themselves and feel they must manifest the vision. The 479 is less strident and more soft-spoken and gentle. They are dreamers and intuitive, but can be shy about pushing to manifest their vision.

I was wondering if you had anything about the 4-7-1 tritype.

You have all three Idealists Enneacards

(Enneagram Types: 1, 4, & 7) in your Enneaspread.

Your emotional energy goes towards seeking ideal relationships and circumstances. You want fulfilling experiences, relationships, and environments. You tend to be fussy and easily frustrated and/or disenchanted with less than ideal relationships or situations. Overall, you want a sense of idealistic perfection. You are quite discriminating and tend to compare yourself to others.

The sx471 is triple idealistic and on a mission. As two heart types, you would understand one another through the connection of sexual and 4. It would be a friendship that had a lot of intensity.

“Deep down in the valley of darkness, long I stood there, wondering, fearing, doubting, dreaming visions no mortal dreamt before. Many dreams and visions appeared in my mind, prompting me to pursue and fulfil them. These dreams lead to a road of zeal and enthusiasm, with negative and positive moments. A ray of light—the light of happiness, fun, positivity, and perfection—is hidden within this valley of darkness, and I try my best to find it. I know that I am imperfect and broken, a man full of flaws and broken bones. Even so, I continue to search for the ray of light. I chase after perfection and happiness, to hide the shame and broken bones of my heart. But there are times I break down in despair and crumble in depression. Even so, I get up and continue searching for the light. The journey is long, will I succeed?”

Could be the sx/sp stacking, mixing with the 4 in the tritype for you. I've met a lot of 7s that are on the constant chase to cool, and fashion is life for many a 7 I have known. Many designers have the 748 or 741 tritype. The need for excitement, change, to influence popular culture, feeds the primary fixation in a particular way, although many of them tend to be sx/so or sp I think.

The frustration types (7-1-4) are most comfortable between the idyll and norming phases, when they have to change things.

4-7-1: The Frustrated Idealist: Characterized by having strong ideals which never can quite be met. They want things to happen a certain way have high expectations, but they usually fall short.

471: More of a happy-go-lucky person due to 7, intense emotions but imbues them with positivity, and even possibly avoids negative ones. Energetic and enthusiastic, inquisitive, curious, ready to take action, somewhat flighty and impulsive while still maintaining a set of convictions and value from 1 and experiencing a deep well of emotion in their activities from 4. Openness to experience, adventurous, but still somewhat reserved. Though they enjoy social activities, they may tire after a while and withdraw. Probably come off reserved at first, but reveal a playful nature as you get to know them, while still experiencing deep emotions. Can avoid emotions they don't like though, and nitpick through, seeming oblivious to a very obvious crisis. Self controlled. Willing to teach others, easy team player though they still feel something is different or off about them, wise in a playful yet honest manner.

1-4-7 | unconscious emotional background | frustration challenges | the hungry ego

Summary | These 3 types are constantly searching for fulfillment, are continuously disenchanted, and feel that nothing is ever enough to fully satisfy them.

Type 1 | Experiencing continuous disappointment from expecting situations and people to meet specific standards, but then nothing works as it should, and they always have to be the person to fix it.

Type 4 | Longing for something that might have been perfect once, but then missing it and longing for it once again.

Type 7 | Continuously believing something will be great, but then needing to quit or stop due to lack of stimulation and full satisfaction.

Frustration - 147

A strategy based on frustration at not getting needs met

1: Becoming the ultimate guiding force to compensate for the lack thereof from the protective object

4: The frustration that anything external is shallow, a focus on the self as the replacement for nurturing and protective objects

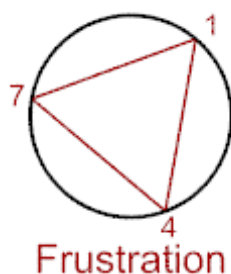

7: Fruitless automatic search for the breast/womb via exciting but shallow experiences

Types 1, 4, & 7 are in the Idealist group and they all hold an ideal vision of how the world could be.

Intensity/Polarity - Types 1, 4, 7

According to object-relations this group is classed as frustration-based, in that the types within it are never able to fully find what they seek, or become disenchanted quickly. I notice a certain polarity and intensity present within each type. With Type 1, the polarity is in morality. The world is black and white, divided into perfect ideal and imperfect reality. The intensity of Type 1 comes within its own moral compass, which seeks to be ethically perfect. With Type 4, intensity is found in emotion. The world is experienced through a very profound emotional filter. Things are intensely beautiful or hauntingly tragic or extremely distasteful. Polarity comes with the fact that there is no emotional neutrality with Type 4. Even something viewed as a common object will have a dreadful commonality attached to it. Type 7 has polarity within their thinking processes, and this is seen through where it focuses attention. Subjects are either interesting or boring. In addition, there is no spectrum of a little intriguing or slightly boring; the mind moves from one intensity to the other, accounting for the distractible nature of Type 7.

Frustration Object Relation (Types 1,4,7)

People with the frustration object relation know what will make them happy, but they feel they seldom have it. However, once they find the source of their happiness, they tend to become disappointed and disillusioned with it. As a result, they become frustrated as they begin their search again. Their sense of self is based on the search for an ideal. These types need to remember that they can find contentment by accepting their present experience.

Frustration in Ones

Ones are searching for ideal autonomy. That means perfection and complete self-control. Ones focus on what's wrong or out of place in a given situation. They become frustrated when they see that things don't live up to their standards, and when they feel obligated to improve everything. Their sense of self is based on this frustration—it shows that they still care about making things better.

Frustration in Fours

Fours are searching for ideal attention—a partner who completely understands and appreciates them. Fours focus on what's missing in others and in themselves. Despite their longing for an ideal partner, their actual partner has flaws and isn't quite what the Four is looking for. Fours seek validation and attention from others, but feel they must be different and distant from others to get it. As a result, their strategy for attention doesn't often work, leading to a sense of frustration that maintains their sense of self.

Frustration in Sevens

Sevens are searching for ideal security and contentment. Sevens focus on the fun they are not having. The current experience isn't quite as fun as they hoped it would be. Their mind quickly jumps to opportunities and experiences that they could be having rather than the one they are currently experiencing. Sevens get frustrated with the present and seek security in the future. Their sense of self is based on the search rather than on the experience.

The Idealists - Types 1, 4, and 7: Issues around a vision of the way the world could ideally be: Ones seek an ideal perfect world according to their internal standards, Fours seek an ideal precious world in which nothing is missing or less than hoped for, and Sevens seek an ideal positive world that is free of suffering and pain.

Types 1-4-7 can be called the Idealists or Utopians, as they each hold a vision of the way the world could be in order for life and spirit to thrive. Don Riso and Russ Hudson call these types the “Frustration Triad,” as they tell us how life fails to reach the idealized views and utopian possibilities. The world just doesn’t match the ideal. Dr. Bill Schafer names these the “Heaven Triad,” as they speak to the possibilities of the ultimate integration of personality and spirit. Thus, Type 1s seek a perfect world, according to the internal standards of the way things ought to be and, and they are frustrated that this doesn’t happen. Fours (4s) seek the ultimate, ideal world in which nothing of importance or substance is missing, in ourselves and the world, — but both are often felt as less than expected and hoped for; 4s suffer over this, and often feel frustrated and disappointed inside. And 7s seek an ideal, positive world that is free of suffering and pain and full of pleasant, free-flowing experiences. Sevens (7s) alternatively seek something new and positive when frustration occurs. Ones (1s) have “lost” or gone away from appreciating the variations and differences — in life and in people, losing an appreciation for “differences” being other authentic expressions of the whole range of divine expression. “It’s got to be ‘this way’.” Fours (4s) have “lost” or gone away from appreciating the already-perfect wholeness in all there is, by instead focusing on what is missing, lacking in themselves or others, and disappointing. And 7s have seemingly “lost” or gone away from embracing all of life — good and bad, mundane and ecstatic, in each moment, and the accompanying wholeness of being that brings. The path for those of us leading with one of the Idealistic types is to see into the frustration — it’s a construct — as an inherent part of the gift that also seeks ideals. Instead, allow ourselves to not allow that frustration to take us out of the beauty and the gifts “already here.” Learn to more embrace the less-than-perfected, idealized spectrum of life, in each moment, as it really is. Living in a state of frustration “is not ideal,” and is not what our idealism was intended for.

The Idealist Group consists of enneagram types 1, 4, & 7.

Each of these types have an idea of how the world around them should be (and they get frustrated when the world is not that way, which is why Riso & Hudson call this group the Frustration Triad).

Type 1s in the Idealist Group

1s want an ideal world based on their internal standards, and they get frustrated when the world fails to meet that standard. Type 1s have lost an appreciation for the diversity in life.

Type 4s in the Idealist Group

4s want an ideal world which has nothing important or substantial missing, and they get frustrated when the world does lack in areas. Type 4s have lost an appreciation of the wholeness of what actual is there.

Type 7s in the Idealist Group

7s want an ideal world free of suffering and pain, and they get frustrated (and run to something new/positive) when the pain or suffering is there. Type 7s have lost an appreciation of living in the wholeness of a moment.

147s are the most idealistic archetype. They intuitively comprehend that in order to manifest their inner vision, they need to push boundaries further than anyone else and constantly refine their ideas in order to further enlarge the collective mind. Their main strength is their relentless push for excellence and the novel, and their biggest weakness is their constant dissatisfaction and frustration with earthly limitations.

Frustration (1, 4, 7)

- Tend to perceive/expect their needs to never be reliably met by others
- Was impacted by a consistent feeling of being frustrated by one or both caregivers
- Mirrors unreliable shows of behavior from one or both figures
- Tend to compare themselves to others and see other's needs being met
- Frequently conclude there is something wrong with them to be missing out
- Internalizes their emotions AKA introjects

The Frustration Triad

The frustration felt by those Types in the Frustration Triad originates in the subject having an unmet need that leads to these Types feeling that the unmet need will never be met--now or in the future. Unlike other Triads, these Types maintain a sense of self and a sense of the need that wasn't met. Other Triads will also have unmet needs, but may disown what they needed or change themselves due to the unmet needs. Once this pattern has been established for each Type in their early years, they will continue to play it out in future relationships.

Type One:

Type Ones didn't feel the ideal level of support they required, and decided at that moment that they would never feel the support. This leads to a frustration that they need to figure out how to do everything on their own and hold the weight of the world on their shoulders.

Type Sevens:

Type Sevens didn't feel the ideal level of being seen and known by the Nurturer in their lives, and decided they never would. From this frustrated state, the Seven decided to feel only positive feelings and continually experience only fun stimuli to distract themselves from this lonely state.

Type Four:

Type Fours felt that they were not ideally known or ideally supported by these two key figures (and never would) and as a result withdrew into themselves where they could attempt to see and support themselves internally. Fours from this state of feeling unseen and unsupported can fall into almost actionless despair if they are not careful.

Frustration: Types One, Four, and Seven fall into this group. Ones are frustrated most of the time; if you know a One, you can see it on their faces quite often. Their frustration comes from living in a world that is not fair or rational. They are also frustrated that they are not perfect.

Fours are frustrated by never feeling that they get what they need. Happiness is always just out of reach. For Sevens, their many adventures, experiences, and collections of stuff fail to satisfy them fully, causing frustration and the cyclical need for more.

1-4-7: Perfectionistic, whimsical, and rather picky, these Ones tend to be quite expressive and passionate. They want things to be a certain way and tend to reject whatever doesn't precisely fit their desires. However, when they appreciate something (an idea, a person, an activity), this tritype can over-indulge in it in an excessive, obsessional manner. They're not as self-disciplined as other Ones, and they're prone to giving in to their fantasies and desires more, believing they are somewhat special and deserve special treatment.

Usual subtypes: sexual, self-preserving, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-7-4, 4-1-7

Flavors: fastidious, expressive, impatient, and original

1-7-4: More eccentric, versatile, and unconventional. This tritype characterizes some of the more energetic and self-indulgent of Ones. They are somewhat more enthusiastic and dramatic, and have some difficulty finding and keeping a balance: they're occasionally rather scattered. They can become obsessional and manic about certain ideas and things, while being surprisingly careless in other areas. When stressed out, they can get quite moody.

Typical subtypes: sexual, social, 1w2

Similar tritypes: 1-4-7, 7-1-4

258 – The Strategist Archetype

258/285: Knowledgeable and direct 2. This is the most confident and tough-minded 2. This 2 is the shy, intellectual 2. Has double access to 8 so can be very militant. Can also swing from extraversion to introversion. The core fears are of being worthless, needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

528/582: Direct and caring 5. This is the most personable and people-oriented 5, especially if a social subtype. This 5 is friendly and outgoing, especially with a 6 wing. This is the 5 that at times can be direct and take-charge, and at others, sensitive and nurturing. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, worthless, needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, immutable, and inconsequential.

825/852: Caring and knowledgeable 8. This is the protective and caring 8 that can also be a 'bookish' and avoidant loner. This 8 is inclined to swing between the desire to take charge, move towards others, and then unexpectedly move away from others. This is the most introverted, intellectual 8. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

Gut: 8 Heart: 2 Head: 5

Energy Manifestation

- 258s can have an imposing, menacing presence even when relaxed. They are constantly studying their environment for threats and power struggles;

Anger Manifestation

- 258s are one of the most unpredictable tritypes and thus can have a volatile temper that can erupt seemingly out of nowhere when they feel wronged in some way;

Advices Given

- 258s like to give out advices in a strategic, cunning way so that the recipient can win their goals effectively without getting too much in trouble. They are nurturing, but very firm about their help so that people can't refuse them;

Energy Manifestation

- 258s are usually shuffling between three distinctive energies depending on the situation. They go toward people when they are at ease (TWO), away from them when they feel vulnerable or need to analyze (FIVE), and against people (EIGHT) when they need to assert their will;

Helpfulness

- 258s help people by selecting the most suitable kind of information that can give the advisee the most power in a very particular situation. This tritype likes to study a situation in depth and knows how to keep a form of emotional dependency over people;

Manipulation

- 258s manipulate by keeping people at a safe distance, not too far in order to keep key connections, but also not too close because they could easily cross personal boundaries;

Relationships at Play

- 258s need connection and approval of others, and thus can employ strategies to keep them useful and sufficiently attached in order to always feel needed or loved;

Social Masks

- 258s like to help people and look for practical advices to give out, but often expect or coerce people to give out their part of the bargain; They are the least consistent in terms of behavior, as they can shift from being warm and friendly to cold and harsh the next minute, often caused by something considered small to others;

Fields of Interest

- 258s are the most relational of the three FIVE and EIGHT combinations and thus feel attracted to psychology and social studies; they really like to learn more about why people act and think in particular fashion;

Potential Problems

- 258s are often so much in a controlling stance, keeping people from affecting them and instead injecting their personal intervention in their lives, that they come across as being enigmatic, unpredictable, and pushy. They can be so well guarded that they can close themselves up to their own needs and vulnerable side, so much so that they may feel empty and desperately in need of love from someone. There is a hypersensitivity to being impacted and lose control of oneself here;

Patterns & Structure

- 258s are triple rejection or relationist. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that try to distance and protect themselves from experiencing rejection and pain from feeling estranged. They are really adept at developing and using strategies in relation to observing and controlling human behavior. This is possibly the most unpredictable and malicious tritype, especially when unhealthy.

The self-preservation subtype is more introverted, so the FIVE fix is intensified for the most part. This subtype is characterized for its greater need for independence and defense structures related to food and money.

The sexual subtypes often have a passionate strike and dearly protect their intimate circle against detractors. They can be surprisingly soft and tender-hearted, but exert a great deal of control onto their close friends.

Dominant social variants are a little more prideful and militant about what they know and may want to be a dominant figure in a group or selective society. They are the most intellectual and people-savvy of all three subtypes;

Interests:

- helping others with your knowledge
- assisting others with your expertise

Mission:

- helping others through knowledge and protecting others

Blind spot:

- being convinced you are right, intimidating others

Fears:

- being vulnerable or uncertain
- seeming weak
- being disappointed

If you are a 258, you are caring, knowledgeable, and protective. You want to be helpful, wise, and straight-forward. Highly sensitive, you are an empathetic, intellectual ‘people’ person. You are both introverted and extroverted. At times, you can be direct and easily move towards others and can ‘over’ give or pull away to recharge.

You are an intellectual ambivert; both extroverted and introverted. Likewise, you are caring and can easily move towards others to help, or feel over extended and feel the need to pull away.

Your life mission is to help, inform and/or protect others. A true analyst, you are happiest when you are in a position of leadership and can use your natural instinct to understand strategic principles to guide others. You can be so identified with your opinions that you can be too forward or too distant from others, which can appear intense, unpredictable, and intimidating. Probably the most power-hungry of all fixes. Likely to deny that they have needs themselves, deny vulnerability, deny deny deny “it’s the others who depend on me, not the other way around”, and can exert a great deal of strategic insight into most situations and become the classic ‘mastermind’ behind affairs. When less healthy, they are control freaks and can’t leave others alone—they need to be the prime mover of them all, while denying all the way that they require the control. One minute they are helpful and warm, the next cold and rejecting, and then another seemingly directive and blunt. On the high side, they really know what is needed to protect and guide others.

Why is this tritype called “The Strategist”? I think it's because each enneatype in the three centers of intelligence concerned here (2, 5, and 8) share the need for maintaining control over social situations in such a way that they always feel needed but never overwhelmed or outmatched. That is why Katherine Fauvre also calls this tritype triple rejection since Strategists want to prevent being rejected in any way, shape, or form by others (emotionally rejected for the TWO, intellectually rejected (competency) for the FIVE and physically rejected (being powerless) for the EIGHT). This tritype feels that if they are needed (TWO), competent and solitary (FIVE) and direct and self-possessed (EIGHT) that they won't ever suffer from being alienated. This is also a very emotionally guarded tritype that is somewhat afraid of looking inside themselves (TWO & EIGHT are outwardly focused and deny their neediness, while FIVE and EIGHT want to be independent and self-sufficient). Also, FIVE feels emotions as overwhelming and intrusive, EIGHT doesn't want to show weakness and is naturally emotionally guarded. Overall, you get a very shrewd personality that is centered about mastering how social interactions work as a whole.

She says this tritype [258] wants to really be of service by providing useful information to others and protecting others through their knowledge or expertise in a particular area. The energy seems quite split because of the introverted 5 interjecting with the extroverted 2 and 8 energy mingling. She said it can be a confusing type because there is a hot/cold quality to them that can be difficult for people to understand. They can sometimes feel they don't have the internal resources to help others, but want to have something to offer (which contributes to the hot/cold quality). I have an aunt who is this tritype (with 2 in charge) who really exacerbates the giving with strings attached things. I'd imagine if self-pres were in charge, it would really amplify the notion of feeling protective over resources, creating tension against the need to be a resource to others.

528 makes a very conflicting character, who clearly wants to get closer to others but at the same time can't let their guard down. They are quite positive and excitement-seeking on their own, but this kind of confidence dies when they are in a crowd.

This is quite a troubled tritype as the circumstances that brought out its fixes makes them hyper-aware of sleights and power dynamics. This is why it's nicknamed as the strategist, they create strategies in order to cope with their hostile environment in order for them to not feel any more powerless than they already are. 5s withdraw to conserve their life force, 2s attract to gain resources (love), 8s assert when there's perceived threat to themselves.

Quite good at initiating 1:1 conversations, but not the one to start first in a crowd.

I feel like triple rejection tritypes are the most prideful triads of all. 2 wants to take care but resists being dependent, 5 wants to be competent and self-sufficient, and 8 hates being controlled.

[258] What's hard with her is that she inadvertently forces people (even friends) to be very blunt when her services, advice, or even presence is not needed. I guess it's the triple-rejection nature that brings on this. My father is the 952 tritype and does this too, only to a lesser degree.

This tritype is interesting to me. If healthy, you could see a pretty amazing blend of 5 integrating into 8 integrating into 2. To some extent, it sounds like a highly balanced, nuanced individual, with much experience and reflection under their belt. But on the other hand, this sounds like some kind of unicorn. There's simply lots of solid integration here, and you might easily get a calm, reserved person that isn't afraid to assert themselves. They will definitely do so for those they care about and for topics they feel competent in. They also might have a soft spot and be a good caretaker if need be. Probably good with boundaries. Doesn't take much *, and can dig through manipulation. Rather straightforward and extremely unlikely to be histrionic. Stable in relationships. Enjoys mastering topics of interest. Might enjoy being a host, but not too often. Probably likes the company of a select few, but still doesn't trust people easily. Can be great in leadership roles that require creative problem-solving. Good work-life balance. Not overly concerned with power, but understand its importance. Likely to use power to empower and educate. Understands manipulation well, might be prone to use it if people don't take their advice. Has difficulty opening up until their thoughts and emotion have been organized. May be prone to call people out if their reasoning doesn't make sense, especially if 582 deems it harmful to said people or others. May have difficulty accepting rules without understanding why they exist.

You have all three Realists Enneacards

(Enneagram Types: 2, 5 & 8) in your Enneaspread.

Your emotional energy goes towards seeking safety and certainty in relationships. You are sensitive to and expect rejection from others. Also, you tend to feel separate from others. You hold back your true self in relationships, offering, instead, a skill, service, or protection. Overall, because you expect to be rejected, you are cautious in relationships and may be hesitant to form attachments. As a result, you want others to come towards you.

2-5-8: The Dominator

These types, more than anything, need to have the upper hand on people. They may be manipulative and/or domineering. Very often, power hungry.

5-8-2: Most personable and people-oriented Five, especially if SOC. Amplified with the Six wing.

Five with an eight fix: least intellectual, though perhaps the most mentally intense. Unsettled by occasional fits of temper, sudden outbursts. Affixed to notions of power; Attitude of resigned realist. Quietly guarded and insistent, may put others ill at ease.

Eight with a two fix: the overtly magnanimous and big-hearted eight. Sacrificial-dominant style of relating to others; as protector, big spender, mama-bear quality.

The rejection types (8-2-5), they said, are most comfortable at the initiation stage of a project or group, when they have to initiate and control things.

2+5s: They're schemers at heart. They combine their intellectualism with their emotionality to create sure-fire strategies that are bound to end with them projecting a "positive" image. They learn as much as possible from their environment to understand its rules and regulations, so they can then proceed to accommodate their image to it and therefore "fit in". This was the problem with Alice, as she could not understand her environment, thus her 5-fix had trouble. And because her 5-fix had trouble understanding, then her 2-type could not accommodate to the environment so easily. This led her to become frustrated and upset with her environment for not providing her coherent and consistent rules. The inconsistency of the rules and her natural tendency to accommodate the surrounding rules is what led her to become confused about her image.

8-2-5: Fear of weakness, humiliation, and disenchantment. Tendency to seek strength, approval, and intrigue.

I was reading through some of your tritype materials and I realized that you describe the blind spot for 258 and 458 as very similar--both as being cynical, headstrong, passionate, and moody. What kinds of things would you look for to differentiate these two? --Anytime you have two of the same types in a Tritype archetype, there is obviously going to be overlap. The 4 brings more moodiness, more depth, more introspection; the 2 is more extroverted, more focused on helping others. The 258 expects rejection, works hard to prevent it, and acts like it isn't important. The 458 fears rejection, hides it as well, and can be hypersensitive to small slights. The 8 in both cases keeps these tritypes from showing their sensitivity to rejection. The 2 brings the reference to others and the external world, and the 4 brings more a focus on the self and the internal world. Relationships with others are important to them. The 4 brings a move away with a pull, wanting others to follow. The 258 tentatively moves towards others. The 458 is as individualistic as the 478 but more opinionated and.....focused on and identifies with intellectual pursuits....more sensitive and less people pleasing.

2-5-8 captures very well my secretiveness and wariness when around other people, and how I show love through doing things for the loved one.

In addition to the usual traits described in Fauvre's tritype definitions, it can be interesting to see how David Daniels describe the 258, 369 and 147 as unique triads that reflect how people relate to the world. Here is his description for 258.

Types 2-5-8 can be called the Relationists, as they are core exemplars of the three great ways to move energy in all relationships. For instance, Type 2 moves toward others to meet needs and ensure care. Type 5s move away from others to deliver reason and perspective, and Type 8 gets declarative with others, speaking out and asserting what is required at any given moment.

Don Riso and Russ Hudson name these types the "Rejection Triad," as they stave off rejection through providing necessary, important functions and by becoming "powerful" in their own right. Type 2s offer care and support, Type 5s offer thoughtful analysis and rational viewpoints, and Type 8s bring strength and protection.

They each respectively assert power in a specific way. Dr. Bill Schafer names these the "Human Triad," as they speak from the heart and form the bonds of connection. These three types have also "lost" or gone away from the integration of their higher qualities and instead, have moved into relying on personality function in daily life. Twos (2s) have "lost" or gone away from manifesting altruistic love and care, and from being in the natural flow of giving and receiving. Fives (5s) have "lost" or gone away from manifesting higher wisdom and understanding, and being in the natural flow of life energy. And 8s have "lost" or gone away from coming to life with a fresh, innocent perspective and from being with natural, assertive action that do not include a personal agenda or need to control.

The path for those of us leading with these types is to release the deeply held concern of being rejected and to open the heart to the natural flow of energy that is love and life itself.

2-5-8 | unconscious emotional background | rejection challenges | the overcompensated/defended ego

Summary | Protecting by not showing all of oneself, not trusting others, and engaging in overcompensating behavior, believing others may reject them if they do reveal themselves more fully and without the overcompensating behavior.

Type 2 | Protecting by focusing on others and acting as if they have no needs, and overcompensating by showing care and offering assistance and resources to others.

Type 5 | Protecting by minimizing own needs, limiting others' dependence on them, and keeping distance from others and overcompensating by demonstrating their intellectualism and maintaining their autonomy.

Type 8 | Protecting by acting powerful enough to protect others while simultaneously hiding their own vulnerabilities and overcompensating by being strong, dominant, and invulnerable.

Rejection - 258

The amplification of one need to distract from the pain of not getting the other

2: Amplifying their need for relationship and connection due to having rejected the need for guidance and protection, mothering identification

5: Rejecting both the need for nurture and protection, thereby rejecting the human condition

8: Amplifying their toughness and becoming invulnerable due to having rejecting their need for nurture and unconditional love

Types 2, 5, & 8 are in the Relationist group, and they relate to the world through relationships (in their own ways).

Each of these types relate to the world through connection to others (and they try to keep rejection from happening by providing necessary functions, which is why Riso & Hudson call this group the Rejection Triad).

Type 2s in the Relationist Group

2s relate to the world by moving towards others and providing support and care. Type 2s have lost their way to manifesting altruistic love and being in the natural flow of giving & receiving.

Type 5s in the Relationist Group

5s relate to the world by moving away from others and providing reason and perspective. Type 5s have lost their way to manifesting higher wisdom and being in the natural flow of life energy.

Type 8s in the Relationist Group

8s relate to the world by asserting to others their strength and protections. Type 8s have lost their way to manifesting innocent perspective and natural assertive action without personal agenda.

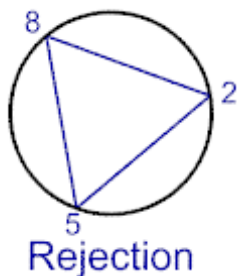

Advice for the Relationist Group

Learn to let go of your fear of rejection and embrace the natural flow of love and energy.

Types 2-5-8 can be called the Relationists, as they are core exemplars of the three great ways to move energy in all relationships. For instance, Type 2 moves toward others to meet needs and ensure care. Type 5s move away from others to deliver reason and perspective, and Type 8 gets declarative with others, speaking out and asserting what is required at any given moment. Don Riso and Russ Hudson name these types the “Rejection Triad,” as they stave off rejection through providing necessary, important functions and by becoming “powerful” in their own right. Type 2s offer care and support, Type 5s offer thoughtful analysis and rational viewpoints, and Type 8s bring strength and protection. They each respectively assert power in specific ways. Dr. Bill Schafer names these the “Human Triad,” as they speak from the heart and form the bonds of connection. These three types have also “lost” or gone away from the integration of their higher qualities and instead, have moved into relying on personality function in daily life. Twos (2s) have “lost” or gone away from manifesting altruistic love and care, and from being in the natural flow of giving and receiving. Fives (5s) have “lost” or gone away from manifesting higher wisdom and understanding, and being in the natural flow of life energy. And 8s have “lost” or gone away from coming to life with a fresh, innocent perspective and from being with natural, assertive action that do not include a personal agenda or need to control. The path for those of us leading with these types is to release the deeply held concern of being rejected and to open the heart to the natural flow of energy that is love and life itself.

The Relationists - Types 2, 5 and 8: Issues around how we relate to the world through connections: Twos move toward others to meet needs and ensure care, Fives move away from others to deliver analysis and perspective, and Eights declare or assert what is required.

Rejection Object Relation (Types 2,5,8)

People with the rejection object relation feel that they have been rejected by others. Others don't care about their needs, so they reject their own needs too. Consequently, their relationships often have issues of not wanting to be nurtured or touched. Despite feeling rejected, they feel they only have one gift to offer to prevent future rejection. Their sense of self is based on countering this rejection by offering their talent.

Rejection in Twos

Twos reject their own needs, their own negative thoughts and emotions. The Two offers the only gift she has left: her heart. She focuses on the needs of others and helping, caring, and nurturing them. Twos try to love others so much that others won't reject them. Twos base their sense of self on putting their own needs aside (rejection) and caring for others.

Rejection in Fives

Fives reject and minimize their own needs (especially their physical and emotional ones). The Five has only one gift left: her head. Fives offer their intelligence and expertise to others, hoping that others will appreciate their knowledge. By building up their own expertise, Fives seek to become important enough not to be rejected further. Fives, having cut off their emotional needs, try to not need others, to be independent, and to not need love. Fives believe that their lack of emotion will shield them from the pain of further rejection.

Rejection in Eights

Eights reject their own needs (especially their emotional, vulnerable side). The Eight only has one gift left to prevent further rejection: her strength and will. Eights believe in their power and know that others can turn to them from strength and leadership. Eights expect to be rejected, but because they are so “tough,” they give the appearance of being able to handle it.

Superiority/Dominance - Types 2, 5, 8

In object-relation terms, these are the rejection-based group, which sees themselves as smaller and weaker than others and thus builds defenses for this rejection from the other. This certainly matches my observation of the types striving for superiority or dominance. Type 8 displays this most obviously with a desire for control of environment and dominance of situation. They exert an energetic superiority towards the external world, using anger as a driving force to gain power over their circumstances. In contrast, Type 2 strives for social superiority. By attending to the needs of others, they can place themselves in the position where others are dependent on them. Without them, others would struggle. In this sense, superiority comes in the value of ‘goodness’ and kindness to others. With Type 5, the dominance is of the self. The rational mind is valued to control all other aspects of the body. Irrational emotions and impulses are dominated and processed by logical reasoning, leading to the belief that the mind is superior to the body. This can account for the Type 5 behavior of withdrawing within their head, as they must attend to this emotional processing to maintain their control.

258s are the most strategizing archetype. They know how to intellectually, emotionally, and instinctively understand human behavior and how to manipulate people into thinking their way at the cost of their own inner sensitivity. Their main strength is their perceptiveness and their biggest weakness is their emotional guarding;

Rejection (2, 5, 8)

- Tend to perceive/expect their needs being outright rejected by others
- Was impacted by a consistent feeling of being rejected by one or both caregivers
- Mirrors rejecting themselves
- Tends to reject others before they themselves can be rejected
- Concludes that one should not rely on others to meet any needs & must be self-reliant
- Offers services in place of their authentic selves to prevent more pain

Rejection Triad

Types in this Triad felt intensely rejected when their needs were not met as children by the Nurturer, Protector, or both. In order to avoid these feelings of rejection in the future, these Types actually cut themselves off from the needs that, in their minds, caused the rejection and become over-identified with the parts of themselves that they feel gives them their ticket to belonging.

Type Two:

Type Twos felt rejection when their need of support and separation was unmet by the Protector/Supporter function in their lives. As a result, Twos over-identify with the nurturing side of themselves that connects deeply with others and cuts off their needs to differentiate themselves and explore their own goals in order to avoid rejection in the future. Twos believe that by offering their gift of love and care, they will be able to ward off future rejection and find belonging with others.

Type Eight:

Type Eights did not feel seen by the Nurturing figure and felt rejection from this unmet need. As a result, Eights over-identify with the separated, differentiated, powerful Protector/Supporter figure and cut themselves off from the vulnerable, deeply connecting feelings associated with the Nurturer. They believe that by offering their gift of power, they will find acceptance and belonging.

Type Five:

Type Fives felt both unseen and unsupported by the Nurturing and Supporting figures in their lives, and so rejected these needs (and other needs of connection and support) and withdrew into a world where they could intellectualize their needs. Fives feel that if they can avoid all of their intrapersonal needs and offer their intellectualism and objectivity to others, that they will find acceptance and belonging.

Rejection: The members of this group are Types Two, Five, and Eight. These types expect to be rejected, ostensibly because they experienced rejection early in life. Nobody wants to be rejected, so the Types come up with strategies to avoid it. Twos do everything they can to please and serve others so that they will become indispensable; who could reject someone like that? Fives, as Thinking Types, rely on their brain to be seen as useful to others by creating a niche for themselves where they can be experts. Eights don't really come across as rejection types, since they are assertive, instinct-based people, but their need to be powerful comes from the underlying fear that unless they display their power, they will be rejected. This is at least part of the reason that they have difficulty showing vulnerability.

Rejection Types Enneagram

Object relations theory suggests that our first relationships as children form our expectations of our future relationships. The three object relation triads in the enneagram are rejection, frustration, and attachment. Rejection types are 2, 5 and 8, and these types feel they have been rejected by others, so they reject their own needs.

These types will like to nurture others, but will often have issues of not being nurtured in their relationships. They try to counter rejection by using their talents, so their sense of self is primarily based on these 'talents'

Type 2s: 2s are driven by their desire to be needed and to help others, so they often reject their own needs in favor of others. 2s feel they need to nurture and help others, as this will stop them from being rejected in their relationships. Basically, their sense of self is based on rejecting their own needs and helping others.

Type 5s: 5s are driven by their need for knowledge and are very withdrawn, so they often minimize their own needs, especially physically and emotionally. 5s believe that their usefulness is based on their brain and intellect, so they offer their expertise to others to try to counter rejection. 5s are often very independent and try not to need anyone, so if they are rejected, they can feel stable enough in themselves. Basically, their sense of self is based on minimizing their own needs and building up their usefulness to combat rejection.

Type 8s: 8s are driven by their need to be strong and independent, so they often reject their emotional and vulnerable side. 8s try to become powerful and strong, so that people will come to them for leadership, and they will not be rejected because they are needed. 8s try to give the impression that they don't care if they are rejected because they are so 'strong' but they are just as afraid of rejection as other types. Put simply, their sense of self is based on gaining strength and will-power to combat rejection.

These types react differently to rejection, for example 2s are the most overtly scared of rejection and will put the most effort into their relationships, whereas 5s and 8s sometimes pretend they don't need others and will withdraw or react aggressively respectively. All of these types try to do things for others to combat rejection, and when that doesn't work, they can react badly. 2s reject nurturing, because they see themselves as nurturers, 8s reject vulnerabilities and protection as they see themselves as the protector of others, and 5s reject knowledge from others, as they see themselves as the source of knowledge for others.

5-2-8: These Fives take pleasure in helping and directing other people, but in the process can end up imposing their own views in a more or less direct manner. They need to stay in control of their relationships, and although they make generous, devoted and fearless friends and partners, others might perceive them as possessive, demanding and domineering. These types tend to intrude on others while at the same time remaining secretive and self-protective themselves, hiding their own needs and problems.

Typical subtypes: sexual, 5w4, 5w6 (counterphobic wing)

Similar tritypes: 5-8-2, 2-5-8

Flavors: self-confident, generous, dominating, and possessive

5-8-2: These Fives are more focused on and involved with their environments. They're typically quite imposing and intrusive on others' lives, although they don't like it when the reverse happens. They are dedicated, courageous, confident, and passionate people, sometimes overprotective of their loved ones and having a tendency to dominate and more or less subtly manipulate others into believing as they do. Aiming for a position of power and authority, these Fives have a deep urge to closely control their worlds.

Typical subtypes: social, sexual, 5w6 (counterphobic wing)

Similar tritypes: 5-2-8, 8-5-2

259 - The Problem Solver Archetype

259/295: Knowledgeable and accepting 2. This is the shiest, most reserved and passive 2. This is a gentle and quietly intellectual 2 that avoids conflicts. Peaceful in nature, this 2 avoids loneliness by focusing on the needs and concerns of others. The core fears are of being worthless, needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

529/592: Accepting and caring 5. This is the most gentle, kind-hearted 5. This 5 tends to be passive, but is dutiful with a 6 wing. This is the 2ish 5 that wants to help, especially if a social subtype. This 5 is usually introverted, but can at times move towards others. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, being fully embodied, not existing, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being worthless, being needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, and inconsequential.

925/952: Caring and knowledgeable 9. This 9 is most inclined to vacillate between the need for peace and quiet and the need to reach out and help others. Bookish, this is the shy, intellectual 9 that enjoys merging with a friend or escaping into another world through a novel. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

Gut: 9 Heart: 2 Head: 5

Energy Manifestation

- 259s are the least assertive of all tritypes and therefore don't have a very strong presence. They are very humble and gentle in demeanor;

Anger Manifestation

- 259s have a very hard time getting angry because they don't want to be at odds with people. Besides that, it usually takes them a lot of energy to be openly angry, so they usually keep it inside;

Advices Given

- 259s may offer their help non-intrusively as they are very shy about making a wave and prefer to give uncomplicated, practical help in order to be heard ;

Helpfulness

- 259s are helpful, often in a specific area or niche aspect. They like to take their time and analyze a task or a person that needs helping;

Fields of Interests

- 259s are good at understanding the root of a problem and trying to solve its ramifications harmoniously. They are also great at doing menial, repetitive tasks (especially if their MBTI is xxSJ);

Energy Levels

- 259s has one of the lowest presence and energy levels of all archetypes. They need regular quiet time alone and in their head in order to feel fine;

Extraversion & social interactions

- 259s are hands down the shyest enneagram tritype of all. They are usually hard to get to know and may appear inhibited and/or unremarkable at first (very true for self-pres dom.)

Overall Persona

- 259s, like all TWOS, usually display a helpful or congenial nature without being too invasive. They can give out advice or practical help in exchange for feeling competent, needed, and at peace with their environment.

Relation with Emotional Side

- 259s deny their emotional needs in favor of observing and creating greater bonds with people. While they can learn to manage their dark side, they prefer to focus their energy on maintaining harmony around them.

Potential Problems

- 259s may have a hard time being taken seriously at times because of their overall gentleness and lack of assertiveness. They are also one of the most prone tritypes to be exploited for their giving character and meek demeanor. Because of that, they may avoid stating their opinion or flat out start believing that they don't matter unless they make people happy (a ONE wing, either from NINE or TWO, exacerbate those tendencies);

Patterns & Structure

- 259s are triple removed and conflict avoiding. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that tries to get along with people without making a wave of any sort and keep a low profile. While 459 are sometime considered the shyest tritype, it is really the 259 that fits the bill better, as they are harder to convince to assert themselves. They mostly opt for being an observer and connect to people in a very unintrusive way.

This tritype often has a dominant self-preservation instinct in their stacking, and that makes them even more removed from their environment. With sp dom, they typically display a slight childlike nature from the TWO fix, and they can unintentionally be overprotected by their vulnerable look.

For sexual variants, this tritype can be a little more needy and seeks to merge with a potential partner (NINE fix). This variant can also make superb one-on-one counselors or romance novelists.

Finally, social variants are a bit more extroverted and intellectual, especially leading with FIVE. This 259 is more participating and engaging than the other two variants and can thus mistype more easily with other more outgoing tritypes;

Interests:

- values friendships
- wants to help people, seeing the good in others

Mission:

- helping solve problems of other people and the world

Blind spots:

- being overly focused on helping others, not thinking of themselves
- being too reserved and passive
- finding it hard to admit mistakes and blaming others

Fears:

- being alone
- sadness

If you are a 259, you are caring, knowledgeable, and accepting. You want to be helpful, wise, and peaceful. You have a very shy, gentle, and reserved nature and tend to focus on what is harmonious. Furthermore, you need companionship and avoid feelings of loneliness by focusing on the needs and concerns of others. You can struggle with inaction when you feel overwhelmed.

Your life mission is to find the information needed to help others manage their difficulties. A true problem solver, you are happiest when you are able to be in the role of a good Samaritan and help others find solutions. You can be so focused on the helpful information you have collected that you can be too passive and miss opportunities that would allow true presence. You also have great pride in giving to others but not needing them. Your growing edge is to recognize that hesitating too long and being passive to avoid conflict does not keep the peace. True harmony comes from being in attunement with what is essential and in tending to what is needed and when it is needed.

The gift of the 259 (or 295, 529, 592, 952, 925) or Problem Solver is that they are the gentle and quiet helper that likes to be of assistance in a humble and specialized way. Their blind spot is that they can be so hidden in their way of helping and asserting themselves that they are easy overlooked and therefore cannot voice their opinions because of this, in addition to being extremely passive.

The 954 is more contemplative and the 952 will be more focused on others

How to tell whether your 9 fix or 2 fix is stronger (whether you relate more to 2 or 9)

2: less withdrawn, more active socially, more assertive

9: peaceful, calm, easygoing, and less intense in relationships

9s have a great capacity for depth, they just avoid conflict. Introspective 9s with 5 in the tritype are the intellectual 9s.

The two most passive Tritypes are the 259 and the 269. They are both Tritypes that try to avoid conflict and keep the peace. Both are shy and somewhat withdrawn like the 459. But the 2 brings active helpfulness, which is why both of these Tritypes are good Samaritans. The 269 is the most defined by the motivation to help, regardless which type is dominant. The 259 is more reserved and helps by problem-solving.

925 is one of the helping types. Only the 926 is more helpful. This Tritype can be introverted and/or hesitant. When 9 is in charge, this Tritype is often good at assessing situations, but can have trouble knowing their own preferences and taking actions on their own behalf. Like the 269 the 259 is inclined to more passive than aggressive and can be reluctant to voice their views. They make great behavioral scientists and researchers.

592: Accepting and caring 5. Most gentle, kind-hearted 5. Tends to be passive 6 wing.

[258] What's hard with her is that she inadvertently forces people (even friends) to be very blunt when her services, advice, or even presence is not needed. I guess it's the triple-rejection nature that brings on this. My father is the 952 tritype and does this as well, only to a lesser degree.

Five with a nine fix: pattern seeking above all. Whimsical exploration, disposition of reluctant idealist. Open-minded, philosophical perspective. Can seem to lack focus while associating groupings of information into larger theories. Likes people and humanity as a whole, shares ideas, and is relatively easy to get along with.

2+9s: They avoid admitting that they have a (completely) negative image (and avoid anything that may lead to such a state). Their ultimate fear is that they'll have a completely "black" image and are unable to escape it. They enter a strong state of denial when this occurs. This isn't necessarily because of the Two side, but much rather because the 9 side can't handle such a reality, and thus this kind of Two is more likely to withdraw into a more "positive" perspective of themselves. It's much nicer and much more comforting that way.

2+5s: They're schemers at heart. They combine their intellectualism with their emotionality to create sure-fire strategies that are bound to end with them projecting a "positive" image. They learn as much as possible from their environment to understand its rules and regulations, so they can then proceed to accommodate their image to it and therefore "fit in". This was the problem with Alice, as she could not understand her environment, thus her 5-fix had trouble. And because her 5-fix had trouble understanding, then her 2-type could not accommodate to the environment so easily. This led her to become frustrated and upset with her environment for not providing her coherent and consistent rules. The inconsistency of the rules and her natural tendency to accommodate the surrounding rules is what led her to become confused about her image.

2-5-9: Because by 5-fix they rely on their experience to provide them with the rules which they can accommodate to, they expect a lot from the surrounding environment. Thus, this all combines to being incapable of admitting that their environment has made a mistake (9-fix, it's uncomfortable to know that the thing you are relying on is unreliable. Or that it is impossible to accommodate to your environment, and thus be incapable of producing a "positive" image). For these reasons, 2-5-9s (and actually 2-9s really) have trouble admitting that there's something wrong with their environment, or have trouble blaming their environment for their issues. Logic mandates that if one is uncomfortable with where one is, one should run. And this might be exactly what a 2-9 may do. They may run from where they are to go to a place that they can more easily accommodate to. A problem may arise, though, when they can't really run from the truth. Running from the environment is in the end admitting that they can't accommodate to the rules of the environment. Thus, if this is something they aren't willing to accept, they may stay and try to learn more about their environment until it makes more coherent sense. In such a situation, as much as they'd like to flee, running is not an option.

9+2s and 5+2s may have somewhat similar issues, but have their main focus be a lot less centered on “fitting in” and more on “calming down” or “finding out”.

As for 925, 9+2 combos often have a “nice gentle cinnamon roll” vibe, but this one would be more reserved & have more of an analytical/philosophical lens than 926 and 927.

952 testimonial: I have periods of time when I am a fully in hermit mode, then I switch to wanting to interact and understand other people. Then I retreat back to being peacefully in my head. It's a constant cycle. For me, if I don't assert myself, then I can stay in hermit mode for a long time and not realize or want to change my routine.

Easy to be manipulated by people as it is. It's so hard to live your life with this type because even when you care a lot about others, people think we're doing many things only to show off while we're genuinely trying to give them the best we could. In the end because we tend to hate conflict, we just be kind only to avoid problems.

With this tritype, you're prone to being misunderstood. Not to mention, it's also a combination that tries to avoid emphasizing their own feelings to give priority to those of others. At the same time, the 5 being part of both fixes makes them dismiss the idea of actually being present or being themselves around crowds (giving the impression that they're faking every time they get a little closer). They don't like to intervene because they aren't comfortable with attention. On the contrary, it's a source of anxiety, it makes them disintegrate into 6, even if they have So as the dominant instinctual variant (which is common in 9w1. For 9w8, it's more commonly Sp). They pay attention to others—even if they don't try consciously and have no intention of doing something with the information collected—that gives them the feeling of closeness, which is disheartening because they have a hard time really getting involved. People are important to them, but they have difficulty opening up, and for that same reason they don't have an important role in others lives. They must learn to express appreciation without exaggerating, But, more than that, they must prioritize their own well-being and become self-confident and self-sufficient in order to truly be able to help and get immersed. One of the positives is that, once out of their bubble, they are superb at making people around feel comfortable and protected, they have a fairly relaxed aura that inspires confidence, same as other 9s but with a more pragmatic touch, not just emotional, they look for real solutions that they can execute without problems, they're way more detailed (although one of 9's weak points is that they try to simplify things, the 5 helps them find a good balance to be realistic). They also have to learn to recognize their achievements and, of course, like any 9, to be assertive and voice their thoughts.

5-2-9: This is a more generous, social, and good-natured Five, who genuinely enjoys helping others out and being in a relationship with them. Although they do require their alone time, Fives of this tritype tend to be more personable, and they make wonderful advisors and counselors as long as they can keep behind the scenes. They are rather attracted to human sciences (psychology, sociology) and have a natural flair for moderating conflicts and solving people's issues.

Typical subtypes: social, 5w4

Similar tritypes: 5-9-2, 2-5-9

Flavors: friendly, understanding, cooperative, and humanistic

5-9-2: Rather easy-going, modest, and amiable, these Fives are usually pleasant to have around because of their friendly nature and deeper understanding of the human needs and frailties. They are less judgmental and critical than other Fives and prefer to focus on the better side of things and people and work on exploring and improving these. They also have a somewhat holistic approach to life's problems and questions—they tend to prefer the general to the particular and aren't always very scientifically thorough.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, social, 5w4

Similar tritypes: 5-2-9, 9-5-2

268 – The Rescuer Archetype

268/286: Inquisitive and direct 2. This is the most opinionated and challenging 2. This 2 can be very emotional or reactive and needs to know the rules to feel safe to go against them. They like to give advice, protection, and caution. The core fears are of being worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

628/682: Direct and caring 6. This 6 is very supportive. A true rescuer, this 6 is often mistaken for a 2 or 8. This 6 needs to be caring and protective to feel secure. This 6 is helpful, but uncomfortable taking the lead and would rather be the right hand to the powerful person. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, worthless, needy, unappreciated, and inconsequential.

826/862: Caring and inquisitive 8. This is the most supportive and dutiful 8. A true rescuer, this 8 is most inclined to form alliances through offers of help and protection. This 8 seeks power through seduction. Can run on high anxiety, especially if a social subtype. The core fears are of being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

Helping Nature

- 268s are very reactive tritypes that like to help in emergency crises. They can take everything too seriously and prefer to live on the edge and act fast. This is also the most protective and overbearing archetype;

Communications Skills

- 268s are direct and straightforward in their communication style and expect people to behave the same way. They don't like it when people hesitate for too long or give out a convoluted answer to their questions;

Anger Management

- 268s can become very angry at times, especially if people seem ungrateful or unconcerned with their help or advices. They don't hesitate to shake things up by reminding them to be courteous and appreciative because they won't do it twice;

Energy Manifestation

- 268s is one of the most active tritypes, and they do well in emergency situations or in a crisis. They use their knowledge in a quite instinctive manner and expect people to follow their lead;

Helpfulness

- 268s are usually more practical in help than 258s simply by the fact that they are they like to offer their time and body to contribute to a safe and protective environment to those in need and who are dear to him/her;

Manipulation

- 268s are controlling because they want to take care of people so much that they can become overbearing and nagging, thinking that people are ungrateful because they take his or her hard work for granted;

Social Roles

- 268s are the hero without a cape who wants to help others in trouble and defend them against further aggression;

Dealing with emotions

- 268s are so focused on others' well-being that they often forgot to check how they feel inside and build up frustration and resentment until they explode if not checked;

Shame

- 268s often feel shameful about having to show their needs to people, so they tuck them away and focus on helping people, often in critical situations, in hopes that they will acknowledge their efforts;

Potential Problems

- 268s can look quite bossy and annoying because they feel that they must lend people their help in order to feel accepted and secure, and can react strongly if their help has been rejected. They may also be feisty and disregard rules if deemed infringing on their own needs to be close to or help someone. Sometime, they take their heroism complex a bit too seriously and act without thinking;

Patterns & Structure

- 268s are triple protective and the most heroic tritype (along with 368). This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to prevent loved ones from being harmed in any way, shape, or form. They want trust and certainty from their environment and are willing to take the necessary means to keep themselves and others from being injured. They are very alert, reactive, and protective in order to fill up their duty.

Self-preservation subtypes have a little less overt presence than the other two subtypes because they focus on practical help. They are usually more down-to-earth and fiercely protective of their finances and others.

Sexual subtypes are quite intense in character and like being in life-or-death situations, exemplifying the hero archetype the best. They can be quite jealous of their loved ones and partners and be controlling when feeling anxious and vulnerable.

Social variants are more involved in their environment and can easily be found in any protest or political group, defending or promoting rights of a particular community. This subtype is the most TWO-ish 268 and can be very adamant about protecting their group's rights and ideals;

Interests:

- creating safety
- protecting others
- fighting injustice

Mission:

- protecting the vulnerable

Blind spot:

- overly focused on ways you could help others, while they might not want or need your help

Fears:

- anxiety
- uncertainty
- being alone
- being a coward
- not being in control

If you are a 268, you are caring, supportive, and protective. You want to be helpful, engaging, and straightforward. By nature, you want to be in charge of your world and are attracted to the noble cause. You wish to shield others from harm and will challenge what is unjust. You want to know what the rules are in order to feel safe and to know when you can break them. Likewise, you are great in an emergency and always want to help others in need.

Your blind spot is that you can be so identified with the pride of knowing how to help others that you may give unsolicited advice or meddle in the affairs of others. You over-give to others to be well-liked, which prevents a deeper connection to your true self. Your growing edge is to recognize that always rescuing others does not mean that you will always be liked and cared for in return, and that it may prevent them from learning how to care for themselves. True protection comes from listening to higher guidance and knowing when to assist others and when to let them learn for themselves. The strongest theme I associate with the 268/682/826 is the need to rescue and protect, but not necessarily put up with problems on an extended basis. It's a kind of in-the-moment problem-solving that expects the other to deal with it and move on.

854 and 862 share the self-possessed confidence with solution mastery. The 854 is the artsy and intellectual 8—with a secret self-consciousness. The 862 is the champion rescuer: a protector with a great need to help-- more duty.

(2)-6-8 : The Reactive 2

2-(6)-8 : The Power-Seeking 6

2-6-(8) : The Compliant 8

This type is characterized by the issues they have with others. They tend to get easily frustrated with others. They want to help others, but they also want things to go their way. Likewise, they have a 'let me help you' quality.

As a Rescuer, by nature, your life mission is to track the needs of the vulnerable and take action on their behalf. A true rescuer, you are happiest when you can use your people skills and desire to protect others to help those that feel alone, desperate, and are in a crisis.

Eight with a two fix: The overtly magnanimous and big-hearted eight. Sacrificial style of relating to others; as protector, big spender, mama-bear quality.

8 in any trifix tends to give license to the other fixes to just “be” unapologetically. It’s not automatic aggression, but rather an allowance of being. With 6 fix, that means questioning and calling out inconsistencies/untruths is louder and more shameless. 8 tends to be uncomfortable with the natural need of 6 to submit, and so it tends to make 6 more counter-phobic but less trusting/warm/friendly. 8 being a reactive type brings 6 into a place where it expects more negativity and can be unapologetically bold.

8-2-6 is a more cynical, dutiful, loyal, and helpful Type 8.

269 and 268 are even more distinctively different. Both are helpful, but there is nothing passive about the 268. The 269 is the gentle person archetype. The 268 is very take charge and is the true rescuer, EMT, helping the disadvantaged archetype. The 2 is connected to 8 already, so if 8 is in the Tritype this Tritype may at first think that they are an 8.

[682] It is a very dynamic and caring tritype. The struggle is knowing when the need to rescue interferes with your own well-being sx/so 268: I will describe this individual as obsessively possessive and domineering, taking on parental roles in most, if not all situations, and the sx/soc simply smother. Most people will find him/her “way too much”, like get the hell off me; Can't you stop telling me what to do?

For them, power is dead important, though it will be more obvious to the observer than to the person him/herself. Both 2 and 6 leads to some issues with denial. 2 main especially will “play innocent” while their power motive is seen by all those who suffered under his/her dominion.

Also, all three fixes have a somewhat calculating quality to me. They are definitely not without ulterior motives.

I don't know at all how any specific three types--2/6/8 in this case-- act synergistically. But I do know that each of these at average to lower levels is very controlling in interpersonal relationships, very domineering (including the 6 due to the sx/so), highly reactive, and also explosive when they feel they aren't getting back what they 'deserve'. So my assumption was the obvious: that the synergy would lead to someone controlling to the point of suffocation and high drama.

269 - The Good Samaritan Archetype

269/296: Inquisitive and accepting 2. This is the most cautious and engaging 2. This 2 struggles with insecurity and feelings of doubt. This 2 is gentle in nature and is the most inclined to be of service to others. Pride comes from getting along with others. The core fears are of being worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

629/692: Accepting and caring 6. This is the most gentle and supportive 6. This 6 is the good Samaritan and can identify with 2. This 6 is conflict avoidant and can struggle with being too passive and being submissive and helpful in exchange for safety and security. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being worthless, being needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, and inconsequential.

926/962: Caring and inquisitive 9. This 9 is most inclined to be helpful and dutiful. Very gentle and nurturing, this 9 focused on the needs and concerns of others. This 9 is cautious and tends to be passive. This 9 struggles with feeling guilt, doubt, and anxiety. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

Gut: 9 Heart: 2 Head: 6

Helping Nature

- 269s are very versatile and can like to help non-intrusively. They provide care and nurturance with their gentle demeanor, but can be a little too passive at times and not act when they should;

Communications Skills

- 269s prefer to communicate with poise and gentleness, with the intention of keeping a peaceful and harmonious atmosphere around them. They're uncomfortable when people are getting impatient with them because this archetype has an indirect and hesitant communication style;

Anger Management

- 269s don't like feeling negative emotions and tend towards passive-aggressiveness when they are filling up with too much tension. This can happen when people don't show appreciation for their hard work and walk all over them for menial services;

Helpfulness

- 269s are the most helpful tritype there is. They are almost always ready to help and lend a hand in a variety of tasks, and are vigilant in the way they help;

Fields of Interests

- 269s are more aware of their environment than 259s, and thus work great in teams and somewhat fast-paced jobs;

Energy Levels

- 269s are somewhat in between 259s and 279s in energy levels; they like being with people, but don't like being the center of attention;

Extraversion & Energy Levels

- 269s are moderately outgoing and naturally other-oriented. They usually like to be of help and use their energy to enhance the well-being of people;

Anxiety Triggers

- 269s try to hide their nervousness and opt for a more positive, reassuring appearance. Not knowing how to act and being criticized for being too passive, even when being helpful, causes them to feel anxious;

Aggressiveness

- 269s aren't keen on displaying their angry side publicly, and instead try to hide this side of their character. They can be passive-aggressive when they feel undervalued, especially when trying to help ungrateful people;

Potential Problems

- 269s biggest issue is about expressing their concerns and opinions about something. As they don't like to rub people the wrong way, they can be too accepting and allow people to walk over themselves relentlessly. They also can be too passive and don't assert themselves when they should, causing some folk to be angry at them. They need to understand that expressing opinions and being more active aren't things outside their capacities;

Patterns & Structure

- 269s are triple people focused and the most helping tritype. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that focus on maintaining good contacts with people and try to ease out pain and social alienation by keeping a nice persona. They almost always want to be seen as helpful and uncomplicated in order to get personal motivation in being part of others' lives.

People who have a dominant self-preservation subtype like to help in practical ways and are the humblest of all variants. They are also the least assertive and openly aggressive too.

Social variants are a bit more gregarious and can be a bit more rigid and energetic with regard to the way they help. They need to be seen when giving out their time and energy to people and can be mistyped as a more outgoing and assertive tritype because of that.

Finally, the sexual variant doesn't mesh well with typical descriptions of this tritype, as they are more emotionally dependent and sensitive to being rejected from their intimate partners;

Interests:

- helping others
- settling conflicts

Mission:

- bringing people together, solving conflicts

Blind spots:

- overly focused on solving conflict, not looking at your own values and needs
- overly focused on helping others, not pursuing your own goals
- wanting to fit in too badly

Fears:

- confrontation
- uncertainty
- being needy
- being alone

If you are a 269, you are caring, inquisitive, and accepting. You want to be helpful, supportive, and peaceful. You like people and want to find ways to engage with them. Your sense of pride comes from getting along with others and being of assistance. You are known for your easygoing and friendly disposition. You hate conflict and may struggle with being too indirect. However, this Tritype® is not as passive as they believe, and gently maneuvers to have their needs met. This can be confusing because they feel they are very generous and non-conflictual, so feel sad when told they are being controlling or manipulating.

Your life mission is to identify what is problematic and needed, then find peaceful solutions for those concerned. A true troubleshooter, you are happiest when you can help others in conflict bridge their differences.

Your blind spot is that you can be so focused on being a peacemaker, tending to the needs of others and getting along with them, that you can fail to voice your own truth and act in a timely manner. You are overly identified with being a ‘nice’ person. Your growing edge is to recognize that being nice does not always create peace, and that being passive does not mean that you are nice. True charity comes from listening to your heart and acting in accordance with what is needed without strings attached, even if it causes conflict.

The Good Samaritan tritype is the gentle, supportive type. They are identified with getting along with others and not making waves. They are one of the most passive tritypes and avoid confrontation. Likewise, they struggle with indecision. They are not identified with their aggression and are passive-aggressive. Of all the tritypes, this is the most helpful and good-natured.

The two most passive Tritypes are the 259 and the 269. They are both Tritypes that try to avoid conflict and keep the peace. Both are shy and somewhat withdrawn, like the 459. But the 2 brings active helpfulness, which is why both of these Tritypes are good Samaritans. The 269 is the most defined by the motivation to help, regardless of which type is dominant. The 259 is more reserved and helps by problem-solving.

Expresses empathy in the way they personally tend to others.

Both the 469 and 269 tend to be passive. The 269 is more ingratiating. The 469 is more aloof.

The 629, 692, and 962 are all the nice guy archetype. The 6 in this tritype is phobic most of the time trying to get along with others. This tritype is helpful and one of the good Samaritan tritypes. If 6 is dominant, there is exaggerated doubt and vacillation. If 9 is dominant, there is more going along. The 629 assists or submits and then accepts or backs off. The 692 does the same in reverse order. The 962 is very gentle, but can be insecure and uncertain. All 3 are very accepting.

261 and 269 seem like they should be similar, but are actually very different types of 2. Both are helpful, dutiful, and kindhearted. The 269 is the good Samaritan that is very helpful, mellow, and passive. They struggle with asserting themselves, but work tirelessly for others. The 261 is the true militant 2 that is very 1-ish and strident, with a focus on being of service. They can think that they are a 1 at first, especially with the social instinct.

269 and 268 are even more distinctively different. Both are helpful, but there is nothing passive about the 268. The 269 is the gentle person archetype. The 268 is very take charge and is the true rescuer, EMT, helping the disadvantaged archetype. The 2 is connected to 8 already, so if 8 is in the Tritype, this Tritype may at first think that they are an 8.

925 is one of the helping types. Only the 926 is more helpful. This Tritype can be introverted and/or hesitant. When 9 is in charge, this Tritype is often good at assessing situations, but can have trouble knowing their own preferences and taking actions on their own behalf. Like the 269, the 259 is inclined to more passive than aggressive and can be reluctant to voice their views. They make great behavioral scientists and researchers.

9 and 6 both accommodate others. 9 to prevent conflict and achieve external peace, and 6 to maintain a support system and prevent others from abandoning them

How to tell whether your 9 fix or 2 fix is stronger (whether you relate more to 2 or 9)

2: less withdrawn, more active socially, more assertive

9: peaceful, calm, easygoing, and less intense in relationships

639 or 629 tritype. Anxious, warm, congenial, and phobic.

Kindest people ever.

The 9 fix by contrast tends to allow 6 to stay longer in a state of questioning ambivalence. 6 still wants to find a structure/truth, but 9 allows more back and forth. Both 6 and 9 have trouble being solid. With 6+9's, one might get the sense that they're playing with ideas rather than how the 6+1 insists on finding one specific outcome. The 6+9 might settle on an outcome, but spend more time re-questioning and vacillating. 9 as a withdrawn energy pulls the 6 fix into a place where it needs permission to exist fully and trust itself.

Watching Jennifer Hudson on Oprah, she seems like a sweet 9; friendly and agreeable with a slight naïveté and slight removed quality in the eyes, like she lives primarily in a dream world with one foot on the earth. Probably the 927 or 926 tritype.

I think that Dr. Drew is the 629 tritype. I am seeing the strength and beauty of sexual 6. He could be social 6. I see him as evasive. He hesitates in all interactions. Noteworthy as action would make good TV. He also never comforts or protects anyone like the 2. I see his fear in his eyes. I see 2s as attuned and/or sticky with others. Likewise, I see 2 psychiatrists as gushing or, at the very least, more emotional.

Any tritype combination that has 6 has anxiety. Any tritype that has self-pres as the dominant instinct is motivated by anxiety. The tritypes that tend to run high anxiety are the 614 and 694... and then 629 and 639.

2+9s: They avoid admitting that they have a (completely) negative image (and avoid anything that may lead to such a state). Their ultimate fear is that they'll have a completely "black" image and are unable to escape it. They enter a strong state of denial when this occurs. This isn't necessarily because of the Two side, but much rather because the 9 side can't handle such a reality, and thus this kind of Two is more likely to withdraw into a more "positive" perspective of themselves. It's much nicer and much more comforting that way.

People who have the 269 Tritype are compassionate, open, curious, and welcoming. They want to be a source of help and create a peaceful and loving environment. They feel proud when they assist others. Likewise, they don't like conflict and often try to avoid it. When they do engage in conflict, they tend to be more unhappy than angry.

278 – The Free Spirit Archetype

278/287: Innovative and direct 2. This is the most independent, assertive and outgoing 2. This 2 needs freedom and can appear to be a 7 or 8. Needs to be on the go and to do for others. 8ish 2, especially if self-preserving. The core fears are of being worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

728/782: Direct and caring 7. This 7 is the most inclined to take charge, especially with an 8 wing, and can be mistaken for an 8. Can be nurturing and likes to help and empower others. This 7 is often of service, and can be mistaken for a 2, especially with a social subtype. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, worthless, needy, unappreciated, and inconsequential.

827/872: Caring and innovative 8. This is the most upbeat and people-oriented 8, especially with the 7 wing. Gentle and helpful if with 9 wing. This 8 likes to be in relationships. They believe the adage, 'the more, the merrier'. Can be mistaken for a 7, especially with the 7 wing. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

Gut: 8 Heart: 2 Head: 7

Anger Manifestation

- 278s have the most easy access to their aggression and can get angry more easily, but they usually don't get worked up really long;

Compliance Factor

- 278s are often seen as uncooperative and prioritizing enjoyment over duty. They are the most opposed to structure and can be really anti-authoritarian at times;

Personal Values

- 278s can surprise others with their strong convictions and stances about certain topics, and can be more outspoken about them than what they appear to be at first;

Energy Manifestation

- 278s are flashier than 258 & 268. They are one of the most extroverted archetypes and like to be free from any form of control and negativity in order to enjoy life at its fullest;

Helpfulness

- 278s like to give in grand, original gestures. Their help is more intermittent and improvised than 258s and 268s, and they usually want to be appreciated for their extravagant gifts and magnanimous attentions;

Manipulation

- 278s are manipulating by seducing and tricking people into thinking that they are generous, selfless, and entertaining persons, but treating them poorly in the end because they just want selfish thrills and excitements of being admired and loved;

Relationships

- 278s love being around people and have lots of fun with them; they are the socialites and social butterflies of the archetypes;

Main Assets

- 278s' greatest talent is their friendly dispositions and openness to sensual experiences; They are very personable and usually make good first impressions;

Role in society

- 278s want people to get along and brighten things up for them;

Potential Problems

- 278s have some of the hardest time of all archetypes looking inside themselves and admitting faults. Their sense of pride and vanity is often bloated and prevents them from seeing that they may be excessive when interacting with others and treating them like mere entertainment. They minimize problems and don't like when people try to impose on them limits of some sort. They want freedom and pleasure at all costs and can display narcissistic and/or histrionic tendencies;

Patterns & Structure

- 278s are triple hedonistic and pleasure-seeking. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to experience life to its fullest without being controlled or bogged down by any means. This archetype loves to indulge in fun and stress-free activities and, contrary to 279s, will actually fight to keep their enjoyment alive at all times. They usually don't get upset for too long because they focus on the fun side of things.

Self-preservation variants are the most fun-loving and materialistic of the three subtypes, especially if dominant SEVEN. They love the fine things in life and don't like to be attached with engagements too much. The TWO element with this subtype is the countertype and doesn't look much like a typical relationship-seeking TWO.

Sexual 278s are flamboyant and crave being the center of attention. They also have a daredevil and romantic side to them. They can be hard to follow because of their relentless zeal and idealism.

Social subtypes with this tritype are a bit odd and less stereotypical because of the SEVEN countertype who is against gluttony and the EIGHT countertype which is less openly aggressive. They are more sensitive to the public's opinion about their behavior and are less impulsive than the other two subtypes, unless they're antisocial;

Interests:

- bringing optimism and positivity
- helping others

Mission:

- inspiring others to bring about positive change

Blind spots:

- overly focused on optimism, getting frustrated when things do go wrong
- overly focused on positive feelings, not wanting to experience negative emotions

Fears:

- negative emotions
- not making a difference

If you are a 278, you are caring, innovative, and protective. You want to be helpful, loving, and straightforward. You are assertive, funny, and outgoing. Furthermore, you like to use your charming and sunny disposition to create an upbeat, positive, and action-packed environment. You are also very nurturing to those in your circle of care. You also like to be free, follow your own muse, and not be obligated to anyone.

Your life mission is to be an instrument of change, transforming difficult situations into moments of inspiration. A true free spirit, you are happiest when you are on the go and helping others to learn to act on their own behalf.

Your blind spot is that you can be so focused on keeping everything positive and honest that you can be too aggressive and fail to recognize the importance of difficult emotions. You also keep busy and in motion to avoid painful feelings. Your growing edge is to recognize that your need to always be positive, upbeat, and free can limit your ability to self reflect and fully be yourself. True happiness and joy come from being present to your higher self and experiencing all of your emotions.

For example, a 2 that occasionally deals with anxiety by distracting themselves and deals with anger by controlling their surroundings, would be a 2-7-8, and would be different to a two that deals with anxiety with vigilance, distrust of authority, and anger by being self-critical, which would be 2-6-1.

The 278 tritype personifies an outgoing, helpful, and confident nature.

278 is the most enthusiastic, joyful, positive, and exuberant tritype. They are people-focused and aim to please. They must help like the 126, but are their own authority and follow their own muse like the 478. Likewise, they're gregarious and funny.

(2)-7-8 : The Aggressive 2

2-(7)-8 : The Power-Seeking 7

2-7-(8) : The Positive 8

Very hardy individual and other-focused. Fun, charming, and sexual.

The free spirit is extremely positive, upbeat, and helpful. They take charge, but do so with a light touch that is sensitive to the needs of others. They are often humanitarians that focus on manifesting their vision. Excess meets gluttony and pride. When the core fears of these three types unite, it can create a defense strategy that is quite compassionate, but can also struggle with issues of arrogance and/or pride about what they do.

Eight with a two fix: The overtly magnanimous and big-hearted eight. Sacrificial style of relating to others; as protector, big spender, mama-bear quality.

87?: Focused, intuitive, and innovative. Most assertive and nonconforming 8. Moody, intense, eccentric, entrepreneurial 8 especially if sx.

*Most freedom loving- 827, 278, 728

I recently figured out I'm a 278, or 287. Merced, I identify with most of what you say, especially always wanting change or new experiences. I'm also conflicted. I'm a very strong person inwardly but can appear shy or low-key; however, I'm restless and straightforward. For those who made the comment about this tritype wearing leopard print—that's funny, but I hate wearing that. I'm a 2 at my core, so I'd rather blend in initially. I actually dress casually or classically. Maybe if they're a 7 or 8 at their core, they might look more like Madonna or wear leopard print 😊. (Actually, I heard Madonna is a SX 6). Before I thought I was 271, but 278 makes more sense. I have no problem confronting people if I think it will help matters. I'm enthusiastic and overall very positive, although I can be negative, but only show negativity to my closest people. I'm actually pretty guarded, but can be goofy or blunt. Rules are not that important to me. I love a challenge and live for them. I'm definitely very independent, and my personal freedom is a priority. Always has been. So the 8 in me is independent and strives to be free, but the 2 in me often covers that side up to be pleasing and amicable with others, and I'm compassionate and giving. So there's inner conflict all the time. And the 7 in me tries to avoid painful feelings and always needs new stimulation. I exhaust myself sometimes, lol! I've always followed my own muse. Knowing my tritype has helped to explain a lot about myself.

279 - The Peacemaker Archetype

279/297: Innovative and accepting 2. This is the most upbeat and positive 2. This 2 seeks friendliness and can appear 7ish. The 'happy' 2 with a great sense of humor. This 2 avoids emotional pain, focusing instead being cheerful. The core fears are of being worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

729/792: Accepting and caring 7. This is the most gentle, tenderhearted 7. This 7 is very creative and receptive. Sensitive to conflict, this 7 seeks peace and harmony, especially if a social subtype. This 7 must be upbeat, positive, and happy to avoid feelings of fear and anxiety. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being worthless, being needy, unhelpful, unappreciated, and inconsequential.

927/972: Caring and innovative 9. This is the nurturing 9 that 'must' be positive and happy. This is the most upbeat 9 as anxiety is repressed in favor of maintaining relationship at all costs. Can be mistaken for a 7 or a 2 and is in denial of sadness or negativity. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, worthless, needy, unappreciated, immutable, inconsequential, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

Gut: 9 Heart: 2 Head: 7

Anger Manifestation

- 279s have a hard time harmoniously accessing their anger and will try to minimize the potential problems before leaning toward their frustration;

Compliance Factor

- 279s can be dutiful and responsible, but has a strong propensity toward fun and pleasure. This archetype will comply more easily than 278s because of their tendency to go with the flow and not causing trouble;

Personal Values

- 279s are less likely to openly express their views about controversial subjects and all less politically-oriented than 278s, for example. They want to keep good relationships with anybody;

Helpfulness

- 279s like to help in a fun, entertaining way. Their energy is often contagious, and they love looking at different perspectives when they are helping people;

Fields of Interests

- 279s can be bored easily with office jobs, so they need regular change in their environment. They can make one of the best entertainers (clowns, show people, game show hosts, etc.);

Energy Levels

- 279s have the highest energy of all TWO + NINE combinations. They can be really excited easily and loves to show their enthusiasm;

Positivity Levels

- 279s are one of the most positive tritypes, but can easily be prone to negative feelings if being rejected or disapproved of;

Communication skills

- 279s are the most relational of the SEVEN+NINE combinations. They love to entertain and be connected to people and may be too permissive (doormat syndrome);

Dealing with Own Emotions

- 279s suppress their own needs and feelings in order to better accommodate for other's. They also prefer to keep things light and joyful to keep others from experiencing negative feelings;

Potential Problems

- 279s, in order to keep them from being separate from others, often accept too much from people's behaviors and may be walked all over because of this. Also, because they are so positive, they cannot accept painful situations readily and can try anything to postpone negative outcomes. If they know how to view the actual usefulness of taking the time to look at problems and the impact they have on their long-term relationships, they usually stop being avoidant about them;

Patterns & Structure

- 279s are triple positive outlook and upbeat. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that try to look at a situation or a problem by reframing and shifting the frame of reference into a more positive light, typically by minimizing its impact or danger.

Self-preservation subtype with this tritype is less airy and a bit more pragmatic in the outlook department, while still being very mellow and optimistic. They prefer not to bother with complicated issues and look forward to having enjoyable physical experiences.

Sexual variants are more idealistic and may wish to partake in a magical or emotional fusion with their partners. They are the ones who suffer the most from being separate from intimates.

Finally, social subtypes of this archetype are a bit more responsible and want to participate in the greater good of society (especially with a ONE wing);

Interests:

- seeing the best in people
- enjoying life and assisting others

Mission:

- solving conflicts and helping others

Blind spot:

- overly focused on avoiding and solving conflict, while sometimes important values are at stake

Fears:

- confrontation
- anger
- being alone

As a nine, I hate conflict. It's unbearable when someone gives me the silent treatment, is angry, or withdraws. Especially if I had a loving friendship before, and when it hugely matters to me. I really like to bring things in the open and get things resolved. Talk things through. See where it went wrong. I do this without criticism. Though, when somebody has hurt me and things have bottled up for a long time I can be very critical, precise, and to the point. That's before a conversation to get things resolved where I couldn't control my outburst. Because it unsettles me and makes me sad. Then I can move forward again. When I try to discuss the situation, I keep it light. Do not want to feel pain. I want things to be on the same level and harmonious as before, and we do not need to delve deep, no need to dwell on the negatives. And let's forget about it. I will acknowledge my errors and empathize, even when I sometimes know I do this more than I should. I think the above is my 7 tritype. Likewise, I think 4 is not part of my tritype as I do not feel envious. It's not a passion or drive, so to speak.

With three positive outlook types (2, 9, and 7) there is a need to keep things positive, a driving need almost or else it is unbearable. The criticality and bottling up phenomena could be due to the 9 in charge, and the 1 wing, as well as the social subtype who all are prone to a sort of indignant, critical anger.

If you are a 279, you are caring, innovative, and accepting. You want to be helpful, upbeat, and peaceful. You are very kind and tend to see the best in others. Likewise, you focus on easy and comfortable ways of relating. Very optimistic and positive, you hate any form of conflict or strife, and use your sense of humor to smooth out difficulties.

Your life mission is to create and promote smooth and harmonic ways to handle conflict. A true peacemaker, you are happiest when you can ease tension and help others get along with one another. You can be so identified with keeping life free of conflict and negativity that you may turn a blind eye to conflicts that need to be managed as opportunities for change. This tritype is the most identified with seeing themselves as peaceful. More than any other tritype, they need peace and positive relating to experience a sense of being... so are extremely uncomfortable with negativity in relationships, compared to 479, who doesn't like it, but expects it. Characterized by unbridled optimism. They don't allow anything to get them down, and they love to enjoy themselves by surrounding themselves with great company and fun atmospheres. They may be a bit unrealistic, however. The peacemaker tritype which is the true ambassador of goodwill.

This is the most optimistic tritype!

Type that would rather brush off embarrassment and be forgiving of other people's mistakes as to not build a bad atmosphere between people.

It's the second most extroverted form of a 9, followed by 937.

How to tell whether your 9 fix or 2 fix is stronger (whether you relate more to 2 or 9)

2: less withdrawn, more active socially, more assertive

9: peaceful, calm, easygoing, and less intense in relationships

If you have the sexual instinct as dominant, you could easily identify with 974. The 972 is less ethereal and more focused on being positive. The 974 knows that they feel unhappy, they are more inclined to hide so that they will not be rejected for being negative.

The super positive types, 279 and 379, report that they try to get through grief as quickly as possible, especially if self-pres.

The 279 Tritype® needs easy relating and positive encounters...they try to smooth things over, so people are happy and easier to be around. ;) They focus on okay-ness.

The 279 feels the need to be happy, relaxed, content, and sharing experiences with others that are fun and interesting. They are known as the one that is always smiling, the great guy or woman that everyone likes because they are so kind, happy, considerate, helpful, and easy to be around. Unconsciously, they feel it is their responsibility to keep up this image and to work hard to keep people happy as well, so they can be happy and at ease.

If someone is unhappy, they have trouble shaking it off, so they keep trying to help the unhappy person with encouragement and teasing. If that doesn't work, they shut down because it just feels too painful. When those with the 279 Tritype® feel this despair, they also feel shame when they are not the ideal happy, easygoing person that everyone loves to be around.

This is because their defense strategy believes that everyone loves a happy, funny, and cheerful person. Not someone that is negative or needy (2), but someone that is upbeat, entertaining, and fun. Not someone that is sarcastic or easily bored (7), but someone that is kind, easygoing, agreeable, and accepting, and not someone that is dull or indifferent.

When this happens, the 279 Tritype® seems to be overly happy and tells others not to worry. Everything is fine, when maybe it is not. They are pushing for okay-ness to manage a very real fear that things aren't okay, and they don't know what to do or how to make it better. So, they pretend... to survive the overwhelming underlying distress they are feeling if you or they are not feeling happy.

When working with the 279 Tritype®, it is really important to help them remember that everything actually will be okay again when they better understand uncomfortable situations by talking about them. Remind them that they will feel happier and more content after they have had the discussion about their hidden sadness and the pain they avoid. Once they have found their center, you can begin the journey of working on the more flexible self-image they need to cultivate in order to more fully heal.

Remind the 279 Tritype® that the dullness they are secretly feeling and the effort that it takes to go through the motions is exhausting, and the attempts to fake it until they make it are also exhausting. Help them begin to see that the fear of being cut off will actually begin to subside when they take steps to let in what they avoid. It must be in tiny steps, though, as the defense strategy is wired to be upbeat and they'll go on tilt and stop engaging and start pretending when they don't feel upbeat. If they are not upbeat, they will be overlooked and unimportant. The good news is that the 279 Tritype® will feel more relaxed and connected to themselves, which feels better than just okay. They feel the need to have everyone be okay to avoid the painful feeling of being disconnected or separate from others. They remember many times when they were really looking forward to just being with people they cared about. Furthermore, they love people, and like just being together; having a good time that is stress-free. They are often the glue that makes it easy for different types of people to come together. They love to make others happy and share in the happiness others experience. When those with the 279 Tritype® are feeling stressed, it helps to understand that they also feel shame and need to be reminded that they are a really nice, easygoing person that everyone does love to be around.

Yes, there is more than one positive Tritype. The super positive Tritypes are the 279 and the 379. The 279 is a Tritype that wants comfortable, easy relating. The 2 brings a greater emphasis on people. This is the 2ish caring, people-oriented 7 or 9. The 379 is even more upbeat and positive. The 3 brings more of an emphasis on achievements. For example, this is the professional, 3ish 9 or 7.

All the 7+9 combinations are somewhat positive. The 279 is focused on being pleasant. The 379 the most positive. The 479 is positive outwardly, but doesn't always feel it.

2-7-9 – Triple Positive Outlook

A person could be the 927 or “The Peacemaker” Tritype, and after utilizing the dominant Type 9 strategies, the person may move to their lines of connection (Type 3 and Type 6) as well as to their possible wings (Type 1 and Type 8). However, if these connections are not effective for the person, they may move to Type 2 and become more helpful, effusive, and relational, and then move subsequently to Type 7 to utilize positive reframing, escapism, or future planning in order to achieve desirable results.

Trying to keep a positive outlook at all times. (9-2-7)

2+9s: They avoid admitting that they have a (completely) negative image (and avoid anything that may lead to such a state). Their ultimate fear is that they have a completely “black” image and are unable to escape it. They enter a strong state of denial when this occurs. This isn't necessarily because of the Two side, but much rather because the 9 side can't handle such a reality, and thus this kind of Two is more likely to withdraw into a more “positive” perspective of themselves. It's much nicer and much more comforting that way.

279s are one of the most positive tritypes, but can easily be prone to negative feelings if being rejected or disapproved of. We are the most relational of the 7+9 combinations, and we love to entertain and be connected to people. We may be too permissive or agreeable, and we suppress our own needs and feelings in order to better accommodate for other's. We also prefer to keep things light and joyful to keep others from experiencing negative feelings.

The Positive Outlook Group consists of enneagram types 7, 9, and 2.

Each of these types have a positive outlook when faced with disappointment and/or conflict, but each type has their own variation of positive outlooks.

Types 7, 9, and 2 all put emphasis on different ways of being positive. Each of these types all avoid pain in different areas, and all have different ways of reacting to their needs and the needs of others... but it is all in a positive outlook way.

Type 7s in the Positive Outlook Group

7s put emphasis on the positive experiences and environment. They avoid their pain and their role in creating suffering so as not to lose that positivity. 7s also overemphasize their own needs and are easily burdened by others' needs.

Type 9s in the Positive Outlook Group

9s put emphasis on the positive qualities of others and their environment. They avoid problems with their loved ones, their environment, and their own lack of development. 9s also have issues with their needs and the needs of others.

Type 2s in the Positive Outlook Group

2s put emphasis on their own positive self-image. They avoid their own needs and disappointment. 2s also overemphasize others' needs and neglect their own.

Advice for the Positive Outlook Group

Be aware that as positive outlook types, you tend to overlook the problem, sometimes even deny it exists. Realize that sometimes it's needed and beneficial to face a problem (without putting a positive spin on it) and work through the pain. Drawing on the strengths of the competency and reactive groups can help you with the best outcome.

The Positive Outlook Group includes numbers 2, 7, and 9. Like their name implies, each number in this triad tries to put a positive spin on negative feelings and/or conflict, looking for ways to avoid or counteract anything bad with something good.

For Enneagram 2, this looks like ignoring anything negative in your own life in order to focus on other people. Their hope is that others will see how caring and self-sacrificing they are when bad things happen. If they can be recognized enough for ignoring negative things in their own lives in favor of taking care of other people, they will be loved.

Enneagram 7 focuses on hiding from negative things by seeking out fun, exciting, and positive things in their own life. If they keep batting down the bad, they will only feel the good, and therefore, will be satisfied and content.

Enneagram 9 is concerned about both themselves and other people. They idealize their world and hate to see bad things in themselves or anyone around them. When negative things happen, they avoid and deny that there's a problem in order to keep the peace. The problem is, they can become overwhelmed by their own needs or the needs of others.

The Positive Outlook Group - Types 2, 7, and 9: The types in this group respond to conflict and difficulty by adopting a positive attitude and reframing disappointments in a positive light, while avoiding painful and negative emotions and situations. They also tend to have issues balancing their own needs with the needs of others: Twos focus primarily on the needs of others, Sevens focus primarily on their own needs, and Nines go back and forth (often fulfilling neither).

The Positive Outlook Approach (Types 2,7,9)

Positive Outlook

People whose dominant Harmonic approach is the Positive Outlook approach are generally optimistic and tend to avoid negative thoughts or situations. Under stress, they seek to avoid the problem, distract themselves with something else, or minimize the problem. These types want to feel good and want others around them to feel good. They would rather have everyone happy (including themselves) than to deal with concerns or negativity (especially in themselves). Unfortunately, this approach can lead them to deny the existence of their problems and therefore delay addressing them.

These types also have issues with finding a balance between meeting their own needs and meeting the needs of others.

Positive Outlook of Twos

Twos can get into conflicts by being too clingy, worried, and self-important. Twos tend to focus on their own positive qualities, while repressing their own negative thoughts or feelings. Twos believe that they are good and that their good intentions will win them positive approval from others. What others think of Twos is very important to Twos. As a result, Twos are always looking for ways to meet the needs of others and finding ways to please others. Twos often reject their own needs in favor of fulfilling the needs of others.

Positive Outlook of Sevens

Sevens can get into conflicts by being impatient, irresponsible, and excessive. Sevens tend to focus on their positive expectations for satisfaction and fulfillment. Sevens are in fact fleeing from a threatening internal world and seeking security in the external world. If Sevens slow down, their minds may be drawn into the inner world of grief, sadness, and disappointment. Their quick minds avoid dealing with conflict and problems through distraction and constant activity. Sevens do not typically internalize their experiences; they remain somewhat unattached to people and things. In conflict, Sevens can quickly discard things and cancel commitments (i.e., the needs of others) without feelings of regret. It is easier to move on to happier things than to stay with things that depress. Sevens tend to reject the needs of others in favor of fulfilling their own.

Positive Outlook of Nines

Nines can get into conflicts by being too complacent, inattentive, and stubborn. Nines tend to focus on their positive and harmonious relationships with their environment. Nines have a difficult time dealing with conflict or change because it disrupts their peace and stability. Nines, therefore, try to deny or avoid these problems by strengthening their attachment to the status quo. These problems will take care of themselves, so why bother dealing with them. Nines focus on the needs of others, often accommodating to others. Nines try to balance the needs of others with their own needs of autonomy.

Positive Outlook - Types 2, 7, 9

The silver lining is what these types focus upon. When the going gets tough, the Positive Outlook types bring our attention to what is still going right and how the problem may not be that bad. Type 7 does this through their focus on happiness, on constantly keeping the environment upbeat. Type 2 will focus on people, calming and reassuring them in trouble. Type 9 maintains their tranquility throughout the ordeal, acting as a soothing presence for others.

One issue with the Postive Outlook types is that sometimes they can easily overlook the problem, even denying its existence. The focus on happiness and positivity can be used as avoidance of problems, and so it's important for people who react like this to acknowledge that it can be good sometimes to face an obstacle as it is, working through the pain and difficulty with resilience.

Positive - 279

See the positives, find ways to bring light and avoid negativity, "everything will be okay"

2: Focus on the goodness in themselves and others, amplify their lovable aspects, keep people close by being a good person

7: Actively avoiding negativity by making life fun, creating some chaos for momentum and distraction

9: Seek harmony and peace, avoid big waves and disturbances

The Positive Outlook Triad (Enneagram types 2, 7, and 9) brings in the big picture. Less daunted by change than the other styles, these types have the ability to take a bird's-eye view of its implications and imagine the positive consequences that can result. What can this change bring me? Why does it matter? Their contextualizing ability often enables them to maintain positivity even when the immediate situation is less than ideal. Bringing in the other two styles can ground their optimism in wise action.

THE POSITIVE OUTLOOK GROUP

TYPES 2, 7, AND 9

This group deals with conflict or difficulty by putting on a pair of rose-colored glasses and thinking positively to reframe disappointment. Each of the three types in the Positive Outlook group has difficulty giving equal attention to both their needs and the needs of others.

- 2s tend to recognize the needs of others and are happy to roll up their sleeves to tackle others' problems while pushing their own into the background.
- 7s tend to be more focused on their own needs and often fail to notice the needs (and problems) of others.
- 9s try to pay attention to others' needs, as well as their own, and as a result, they often become overwhelmed, so they tend to tune out instead of responding to either.

Types 7, 9, & 2 are in the Positive Outlook group, and they have a positive view when faced with conflict.

358 – The Solution Master Archetype

358/385: Knowledgeable and direct 3. This is the most tough-minded, self-sufficient 3, especially if a self-preserving subtype. This 3 can look like an 8. Moves towards others and can take charge and then unexpectedly move away. The core fears are of being incapable, unable to do, inefficient, second best, unmasked, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

538/583: Direct and focused 5. This is the most measured, no-nonsense, and goal-oriented 5. This 5 is focused on goals and achieving. This 5 can look like a 3 or an 8. Seeks power and can manage projects like an 8 but can't hold the stance of indifference. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, failure, being incapable, unable to do, inefficient, second best, and unmasked.

835/853: Focused and knowledgeable 8. This is the most strategic and scholarly 8, especially if introverted. This 8 likes systems and focuses on mastery and efficiency. This is also the most private, impersonal 8 and can be mistyped as 5, especially if self-preserving. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

Gut: 8 Heart: 3 Head: 5

Talents

- 358s are very good at understanding all the strategic ramifications of a situation and are really keen on understanding the best way to maximize profit and impact;

Adaptability

- 358s are quite adaptable, but prefer to coerce people and bend the rules to their advantage;

Activity Levels

- 358s are more action-oriented and can both think and act in quick successions in order to not waste time and be more efficient;

Competitiveness

- 358s use their FIVE fix in order to gather as much useful information as possible in order to strike into an exploitable weakness. They are usually considered fearsome opponents because of their sly and cunning strategies;

Focus of Attention

- 358s are masterminds and thus can hone in on very specific details that most people might overlook. They are hard-nosed people, even with a preference for intuition in MBTI;

Protectiveness

- 358s has that tough love attitude going on where they only protect people when they are truly unaware of a threat and innocent. They like to give out practical advice in order to encourage people to be independent and fend for themselves;

Relationships at Play

- 358s have a harder time connecting with people and can be deemed as unemotional and high-strung, demanding excellence if they are in a position of authority;

Social Masks

- 358s prefer to keep a cool, unemotional mask that can prevent people from interacting with them because of their daunting appearance. They like to be praised for being competent and can act arrogant because of that;

Fields of Interest

- 358s are often attracted to business, finances, and/or politics since it's where the true power is at. They love to understand how to act and look powerful and master all the tricks in order to succeed in doing so;

Potential Problems

- 358s can be so detached from their emotional and vulnerable side that they can come across as being uncaring and cold-hearted to most people. They can be so attached to their image of an untainted successful person that they may never be able to crack open their own inner shell of vulnerability. Being so removed from their feelings all the time can make intimacy and relationships suffer from others feeling deficient and uncared for. This archetype is also very stubborn, and it's hard to be able to put their mentality into question, as they often seem to have an answer for everything;

Patterns & Structure

- 358s are triple strategizing and hard-nosed. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that try to come up with an effective solution in order to keep themselves from experiencing shame, being overwhelmed, and vulnerable. Those people are the powerhouse of the archetypes and are always coming up with new ways to control and maneuver their environment to make themselves above others and successful.

This archetype combined with a dominant self-preservation instinct is extremely practical and resourceful. This is one of the most independent and self-sufficient combinations of the entire enneagram theory. They keep their boundaries very protected and may be impenetrable.

The sexual subtype is more preoccupied with keeping a strong and secure bond with their loved ones. They have a lot of subtle but noticeable charisma that they can exploit to manipulate people. This is also the most emotionally-aware 358.

The social dominant 358 is more cause-driven than the other two subtypes and concerned with how they present themselves to the public. They like to appear as withholding intellectual and political mastery over their environment and may maintain an image of an unwavering, powerful tycoon. Very good at reading people and know how to climb up corporate ladders;

Interests:

- finding creative solutions to problems
- seeking justice and success

Mission:

- using your creativity and intelligence to solve problems and make the world a better place

Blind spots:

- ignoring emotions and needs of others
- afraid to seem vulnerable and ignoring own feelings

Fear:

- showing their secrets and their vulnerability

If you are a 358, you are ambitious, knowledgeable, and protective. You want to be efficient, wise, and straightforward. Tough-minded, you are good at studying a problem and finding both original and practical solutions others often miss. Highly tenacious, you work tirelessly until you find effective solutions and can prevail against any type of adversity. Winning is very important in the game of life.

Your life mission is to use your cleverness and astute powers of observation to serve the greater good. A true problem-solver, you are happiest when you can evaluate what is needed and take action to create change. You can be so focused on your goals and ideas that you become an opinionated, hard-nosed thinker that is in denial of your feelings. You can feel so vulnerable that you refuse to let in the importance and wisdom of your painful emotions. In short, you are an ambitious, tenacious, opinionated, tough-minded, hard-nosed, foundation building, mental giant that is in denial of and minimizing of their more tender emotions. They are self-assured and goal oriented; willing to do what it takes to succeed. This is the best tritype for combating obstacles.

The 358 Tritype® Archetype, The Solution Master, includes the 358, 385, 538, 583, 835, and 853. This Tritype® is a dynamic achiever and power broker, but is also often misunderstood. From the outside, the 358 Tritype® may seem like a brash, confident, and success-driven achiever that does not suffer fools gladly. They can appear to be tough-minded individuals that can easily call a spade a spade, but can also come across as stony and insensitive.

This is true in part because the 358s are street-wise and believe in the school of hard knocks. They think that one learns the most by doing, and they think that the best lessons in life are learned by having to do things the hard way.

The 358 is known for being strategically brilliant, but also for being blunt and to the point. Their inner drive is to succeed and conquer. They do this by using a mind over matter approach to life and their innate ability to quickly size up the competition or situation at hand. They begin by setting their sights on something that is of interest to them, and then developing and executing the plans needed to acquire it. Likewise, they achieve their goals by employing foresight, strategic planning, and step-by-step analysis.

358's are known for being impersonal and unemotional. Yet the truth is everything and is very personal for them. They see life as one giant chess game that they intend to win through mastery.

But that is only part of the story. They succeed not because they do not have emotions, but rather because they are not limited by emotions. The 358 can separate their emotions from any issue at hand, which can at times be confusing to some of the more tender-hearted Tritypes® like the 269, 379, or 469, all of whom use their emotions to make decisions. In fact, the 358 Tritype® believes that emotions confuse and limit; only serving to slow them down.

358s focus on the long game and have very little use for ignorance. They are demanding of themselves and others. They are natural entrepreneurs and generally achieve whatever they set out to do. Furthermore, they seek and can readily identify the competitive advantage in any area of life, whether in business, sports, or love. They will always have or will readily develop a strategy for success.

Their main focus in life is to achieve the realization of their ambitions. They do this by enduring and overcoming adversity. They never give up and do not back down or give in. Setbacks become fuel for future endeavors. Failures pave the way for greater successes.

They are no nonsense people that value experience over titles or degrees. They are extremely hard workers and very self-motivated. They can be seen as workaholics, but they truly love whatever they do, or they would stop doing it. Likewise, they're what they achieve.

Another important part of the story is that the 358s are actually thinkers and doers rather than feelers. Underneath their logical solution mastery is a tender-hearted person that manages distress by doing something to fix a problem rather than being trapped in what feels like illogical emotional chaos. The truth is that the 358 is uncomfortable with emotions; both their own emotions and the emotions of others. This is because they value data and information and fail to see the data and information that emotions provide.

358s have a defense strategy that survives by learning from their experiences so that they can succeed the next time they face the same issue. Emotionally charged experiences that result in feelings of shame and humiliation leave the strongest impressions. As a result, these are the areas of life that the 358s wish to conquer first. And these are the first lessons the 358s want to teach loved ones.

358s do not want anyone they care about to suffer or be disadvantaged because their loved one is mired in an emotional crisis or emotional paralysis. They vividly remember the times they felt debilitated because their own emotions got in the way of affirmative action. As a result, 358s prefer the power that comes from action and mental constructs, even at the expense of their emotions. They are naturally more adept at using their will center and mental center. They see their ability to go into action and use a mind over matter approach to life as much more reliable than the inconstancy of the heart. Furthermore, they prefer the world of logic, thoughts, actions, and willfulness, over the world of feelings and emotions. Instead of offering sympathy, they offer strategies.

They respect those that overcome obstacles, and they admire those that develop the confidence that ensues as a result of overcoming adversity. They want their loved ones to learn how to provide for themselves so that they will have the confidence and know-how that comes from succeeding by learning from failures. They show love by teaching them how to provide for themselves and/or by providing resources for those in their circle of care rather than offering sentiment. But more specifically, they demonstrate love by teaching loved ones how to survive and make it on their own, no matter what life throws at them.

Check list:

- Have always been rejecting authority
- Short temper, which I learned to control a bit more over the years. As a kid, this was extreme.
- Big ego
- Have been in fights.
- Dark humor, which seems to often offend people
- Spiteful/vengeful
- Can be manipulative
- Often unpredictable
- Never bored, I can always find things to do.
- Competitive (can get jealous, too)
- Always busy, often setting extremely high goals for myself
- Perfectionism in my work

583: more focused on control and meeting objectives than other 5s. He is more stubborn, severe, and protective (8).

The 135, 358, and 359 tritypes are naturally inclined to be tenacious and persistent.

The 835 is the ambitious, tenacious, opinionated, tough-minded, hard-nosed, foundation building, mental giant that is in denial of and minimizing of their more tender emotions.

853: These E8s tend to be more introverted, and often tend towards the 9 wing. They're typically incredibly strategic and planning, with a tendency to be paranoid. More focused on having control to protect themselves than a need to rebel or have authority. Tend to protect themselves by learning new skills, and tend to be resourceful. May have a hidden need to prove themselves to others. Are often natural warriors, with a tendency to be confrontational, but don't seek it out.

358: Intense combination. Confident. Wants to have control, be successful, and accumulate knowledge. Perhaps could be described as "rough around the edges" compared to 351 who are more refined, or 359 who's less overwhelming. 358 has a bit of impulsiveness thrown into the mix. Core 3 would lend a little more social ease, although this combination might come off a bit domineering unintentionally. Straightforward. Ambitious. Tough-minded, can be arrogant, studious, and observant, "schemer." Could become somewhat distanced from their emotions. Powerful.

The only issue is lack of real challenge for these types because of the inevitable futility they will come to see in life. When all things are temporary, what's the point? Their key to their happiness lies in conquering skills with quantitative evidence. Then, once they prove mastery of all (this includes love), they can contently be a master of none. Once revered as a star, their claim to fame can be left untouched. The practicality of this goal is rightfully attributed to the permanent storage of life through artifacts, such as videos, pictures, or works of art. Once worshiped for mastery of all, dying at peace is the last step to the eternal happiness of a 358. And this is how one lives their best life.

538: Excellent problem-solving skills, but also prone to the “gifted kid burnout”. Wants to be seen as competent in a certain expertise, also thinks that knowledge & power is the essential key to survival.

(3)-5-8 : The Power-Seeking 3

3-(5)-8 : The Aggressive 5

3-5-(8) : The Competent 8

Extreme narcissism. They believe that they are better than everyone else, and that they can handle anything that comes at them. They feel as though they are capable of anything and have ambitious plans.

5-8-3: Most measured and goal-oriented Five (I would have phrased it as “results-oriented”).

Five with an eight fix: least intellectual, though perhaps the most mentally intense. Unsettled by occasional fits of temper, sudden outbursts. Affixed to notions of power; attitude of resigned realist. Quietly guarded and insistent, may put others ill at ease.

Eight with a three fix: the notably success-oriented, prominence-seeking eight. Utilizes image and manipulation to advance their career or enterprise. Business achievement can lead to political aspirations.

I'm 835. Low sensitivity? Yeah. I don't pick up on interpersonal subtleties well or acknowledge soft emotions in others, esp. at work. I need to see clear expressions of hurt to know that I'm being too forceful. And by then, I've already run the person down.

Truth and Justice? Big time. Society could never give me justice if my line has been crossed. I've got to seek it out for myself.

The 835, 358 and 538 tritypes struggle with sensitivity the most

I can see parts of myself in your description from the standpoint of Tritype 538.

My core type is a 5 social illiterate who feels that he cannot effectively participate in society, on this alien planet, without first mastering the language of human social interaction. Once a certain level of mastery is attained, the compensatory social presentation is 3ish in flavor. 8 represents my ace-in-the-hole when the going gets tough.

All 5s report that they felt that they missed the handbook that explained how to read and understand social signals when they were young. On another note, the 538 is more authentic due to the 8.

Just saw 'The Social Network' and Mark Zuckerberg is played as a Social 538 Tritype. Very tough, unemotional, brilliant mind, and Social instinct totally out of control. The character wants social status over personal connection or money

The 4-5-8 is the most direct and blunt of all the tritypes, except for perhaps 3-5-8.

The Solution Master tritype expresses empathy by providing for others.

8-3-5 is the most direct combination.

If 583 is your tritype then you probably have an air of self-confidence hiding your nerdiness.

5-3-8: More ambitious, competitive, and assertive than others, these Fives stand out through their leadership abilities. They are rather good at managing people and know how to employ their powers and competencies in order to obtain an effective result. Pragmatic, goal-oriented and driven, but also a tad arrogant and egotistical, they know how to influence a situation to their advantage. And yet, although they are proficient in authority positions, others can find them quite unsympathetic and self-interested, with very little interest in people who cannot be of clear use to them.

Typical subtypes: social, sexual, balanced wings

Similar tritypes: 5-8-3, 3-5-8, 8-5-3

Flavors: self-confident, pragmatic, hard-working, and narcissistic

5-8-3: A more ambitious, materialistic and dominant Five, who has a talent for leadership and a desire for achievement. More competitive and assertive than others, these Fives manage to get out of their shells more often to experience life in a more direct manner and obtain a position of power and success. Although still reserved and secretive, they exude a certain amount of self-confidence and strength which prevents their true vulnerabilities from being guessed by others (a huge fear of this tritype).

Typical subtypes: social, self-preserving, 5w6 (counterphobic wing)

Similar tritypes: 5-3-8, 8-5-3

Flavors: poised, ambitious, domineering and territorial

359 - The Thinker Archetype

359/395: Knowledgeable and accepting 3. This is the most gentle and passive 3. This 3 is very private and can be mistaken for a 5. They're very slow to reveal themselves and can be inhibited, especially if a self-preserving subtype. This 3 can be easygoing. The core fears are of being incapable, unable to do, inefficient, second best, unmasked, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

539/593: Accepting and focused 5. This is the most goal-oriented 5 that secretly needs acceptance and prestige. This 5 is gentle in nature and often enjoys technical scientific activities. Seeks attention by disseminating information. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, being fully embodied, not existing, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked.

935/953: Focused and knowledgeable 9. This is the goal-oriented and intellectual 9. This 9 is very hidden and is frequently mistaken for a 5 if introverted with the self-preserving subtype, or as a 3 if extroverted with the social subtype. This 9 also needs to be considered impressive. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

Gut: 9 Heart: 3 Head: 5

Talents

- 359s are adept at blending in their assigned environment and understanding what's expected of them. They work best away from the limelight;

Adaptability

- 359s are the most pliable and shapeshifting of the three archetypes; they like to be discreet and can see all points of view;

Activity Levels

- 359s are more passive than the other two archetypes and can be more mellow in personality because of this;

Energy Levels

- 359s are the least extroverted out of the three THREE + NINE combinations. They prefer to act in the background and keep their observations to themselves;

Role Fits

- 359s are better at and more comfortable behind-the-scene and can prove their worth with their sharp and knowledgeable mind;

Information Gathering

- 359s use their personal knowledge, independent thinking, and stored-up data in order to better conform into a designated role or do a specific task;

Extraversion & social interactions

- 359s are discreet, but also the most adaptable of the FIVE+NINE combinations. They like to camouflage themselves behind an image depending on the situation and can blend in almost anywhere.

Overall Persona

- 359s want to display a discreet but successful image, as they don't like being too much in the limelight. They like to impress people by solving difficult tasks and acting pretty humble about it.

Relation with Emotional Side

- 359s are very cut off from their emotions, in order to better concentrate on their overall goals. They may feel at loss when discussing them openly. They very much think that feelings are a burden sometimes (others' or their own);

Potential Problems

- 359s can be so identified in appearing adaptable and being the person for every situation that they may lose their connection to their own feelings. They may have a hard time understanding the need to validate and respond to others' emotional side, that they may come across as unfeeling or robotic;

Patterns & Structure

- 359s are triple camouflaging and hidden. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that tries to cover and hides the self and its vulnerabilities in order to better fit their assigned role in any given situation. They like to prove their worth practically while being efficient and adaptable. The vanity and deceit of the THREE is less apparent here.

A lot of 359s are dominant self-preservation and thus feel distant and removed from their environment. They are also the least openly arrogant and boasting of all 3 combinations there is. They are also more down-to-earth and savvy than the other twos variants.

Sexual subtypes are more passionate and idealist. They may want to look like the perfect husband/wife to their partner and hide behind a glamorous veneer in order to be accepted (especially with THREE leading). They are attentive to what makes them feel alive and may be more emotional than self-pres or social variants.

The social variant is the most outgoing and openly arrogant. They want to be seen as successful and like to display their competency and knowledge. More active and engaged socially;

Interests:

- be in control
- focused on intellectual pursuits
- achieving success

Mission:

– think up solutions when there is conflicting information or conflicting views

Blind spots:

- appear cold and distant because you hide emotions
- ignoring negative feelings

Fear:

- failure

If you are a 359, you are ambitious, knowledgeable, and accepting. You want to be efficient, wise, and peaceful. Intellectual and clever, you find amenable ways to manage difficult situations and relationships. Often shy, you are very private and need time to more fully reveal yourself. You are ambitious, but seek admiration subtly. You can seem somewhat invisible when you want to due to your ability to fit in, even if you lead with type 3.

Your life mission is to use your ability to unite opposing points of view, find compromise and create workable solutions. A true advocate (also, thinker), you are happiest when you can use your skills to be helpful and judicial.

Your blind spot is that you can be so reserved that your true nature remains hidden and under expressed, which can cause you to appear aloof and indifferent. To feel in control, you may use withholding and punishment. Your growing edge is to recognize that your need to pull away and be a spectator before engaging denies you the opportunity to more fully be. True wisdom comes from following your higher guidance, revealing yourself to others and participating in life. A very mediating tritype, this is the person who wants to mediate conflict amongst people in a detached way. Less inclined to be fluid and artistic, but is rather personable and detached. Calm, composed, professional and slightly hidden.

Very steady, calm, and typically has a “less talk, more work” mentality. The description of 593 literally says that 593 are calmly and steadily working towards their goals when others moan.

Paradoxically, though celebrities have given up a great deal of their privacy and identity to the collective, the public doesn’t necessarily “know” them, at least not their most private fears, secrets, and desires (though those do surface if they’re sensational enough) even though the public might speculate on these things. The 593 is particularly stealthy when it comes to image manipulation—especially when 3 is in the lead. A lot of people may have an idea of whom the 593 is, but in reality, the face they show is only a facet of what’s revealed. I don’t think the 593 him-/herself fully understand the depth and multiplicity of the masks they don. The 5’s “information is currency” in conjunction with the 3’s image consciousness creates an awareness of how information can influence how others perceive you. Then, when you add the 9ish amorphousness and intuitive feel for how they and other people occupy space, you get someone who can successfully be a chameleon in any situation they’re situated in. They have the ability to detach themselves from their environment while also intuitively knowing what to anticipate from it. Though, it could inadvertently create a feeling of amorphousness towards one’s own identity.

Triple hidiers of true self, camouflagers, the disguised person, the person that is most hidden, since the three types are hiding their true self and camouflaging who they are for safety and security. 3 is focused on having a successful image (not showing their ugliness), 5 on not wanting to reveal things about themselves to be safe, and 9 wants to go along to get along and hides anger. Discreet, could blend in anywhere. Deep thinker, sees all points of view, wants to be the best.

I feel, in general, 593s will be more accommodating even though they have less interest in emotions or sympathy. Although they are reserved and aloof like 5s, 593s are actually pretty chill and also friendly if they find someone with their niche. The 593 tritype is actually very abundant in the academic field. They almost resemble 9s. They are high achievers, often times silent achievers, have a calming presence, and are very likable.

593 - more relaxed

539 - more success oriented

593 - more lazy

539 - more workaholic tendencies

593 - less chameleonic than 539

593 - more reserved and introverted

539 - more extraverted

593 - are less reactive than 539

The 135, 358, and 359 tritypes are naturally inclined to be tenacious and persistent.

I'd say that I show persistence in regard to goals and ideas, pursuing them until I'm satisfied I've learned all I can from a particular pursuit (3) or avenue of inquiry (5). And with people as well: I tend never to give up on people. I tend to avoid conflict and wait (often passively) for the other person to "come around." (9)

359s are very incognito for the most part...but the 3 wants the attention even if the 5 and 9 are reluctant. It is an interesting dichotomy.

The 3, 5, and 9 all conceal who they are in favor of whom they think they need to be. 3 adapts to their environment to give us their best image, the 5 wants camouflage to hide detection to feel safe, and the 9 wants to match their environment and go along to get along. The 359 needs to adjust to avoid detection and scrutiny.

The 359 is private and introspective and often pairs with a more assertive outgoing type like the 1 or 8.

I have to laugh, as the 359s may not want to respond. They have reported a strong sensitivity to exposure.

I think 3-5-9 may expose him or her self if it is done, say, in one's writing in the name of academic or theological inspiration to others. We might describe our Dark Nights; however, immediately rush ahead to the good part where we overcame the darkness with our keen and wise mind and all is hunky-dory now.

Calling all 359s...do you notice the need to conceal your true feelings from others?

I feel the need to conceal my true feelings from myself.

I smile when I read this. It is amazing to me that other 359s have something very similar. I need to add that 359s have a great sense of humor that is dry and witty.

The above is actually a true statement. I really have a difficult time with feelings. I feel things like enthusiasm, bursts of love and insight, and discomfort. There is a person in my life that makes me feel really upset. Instead of sadness or anger; whenever she comes around, I get a migraine...

Do we have feelings?

Yes...or so I am told, tucked away in separate locked boxes.

You can get kind of a robotic feel, much like the 531.

359 Tritype is very hidden.

The sx 359 is as you describe. It is the shy 3 that is more covert and internal but still has a great need to be seen and admired for achievements...and focuses on being the ideal image of femininity (or masculinity).

(3)-5-9 : The Withdrawn 3

3-(5)-9 : The Normative 5

3-5-(9) : The Competent 9

The Enneagram 593 tritype combines elements from three different enneagram types: Type 5 (The Investigator), Type 9 (The Peacemaker), and Type 3 (The Achiever).

- Type 5: The Investigator – This type is characterized by their desire to understand, analyze, watch, and learn. They're often perceived as insightful and knowledgeable, harboring a keen interest in figuring out how things work.
- Type 9: The Peacemaker – Type 9 brings a basic desire for inner and outer peace to this tritype's dynamic. They tend to be accepting, easygoing, and supportive, avoiding conflict whenever possible and striving to create a harmonious environment.
- Type 3: The Achiever – This type is ambitious, adaptable, and energetic, with a focus on achievement. They're inclined to be competitive and image-conscious, driven by an underlying desire to feel valuable and worthwhile.

Individuals with the 593 tritype combine the investigative qualities of Type 5, the peaceful and harmonizing tendencies of Type 9, and the drive for success and adaptability of Type 3. This may result in someone who is ambitious yet peaceful, curious and intelligent, and eager to maintain harmony in all areas of their life.

At their best, these individuals are adaptable, knowledgeable, and harmonious, using their keen intellect and motivation to unite and inspire those around them. However, when unhealthy, they may avoid conflict to their detriment, overemphasize work and achievement while neglecting emotional connection, and become detached from their own feelings.

It's essential for a person with this tritype to remember the importance of inner harmony and self-understanding alongside their ambitious goals, and to avoid excessive detachment in the pursuit of knowledge or success. Balance is key for a fulfilling life for those with the 593 tritype.

359- Likely to win people over with a "buddy, buddy" demeanor. Relaxed demeanor but still a networker, friendly, floater. A little more seemingly withdrawn than 358 due to 9, but this can also work to their advantage by making their approach seem much more genuine and personable. Ease tensions with clever, pleasant remarks. Much more go with the flow than the 358 tritype as well. Though they seem personable, you don't actually learn much about them as their feelings are hidden behind a mask of pleasantries and amiability, good listener, suggester.

This tritype is a dreamer of sorts, but also somewhat intellectual. They have many ideas of what they would like to happen in their life, and may construct plans to accomplish it, but an isolationist.

Another example; if someone is a 3, they may have a tritype of 3-5-9. This means that once the 3 has exhausted their main type strategies (image maintenance, solution orientation, efficiency, self-promotion, etc) they will move to the head center and utilize the strategies of the 5 (cerebral reflection, theorizing, withdrawal, and avarice, etc.) in order to gain the results they need. If 5 strategies don't work, they may move to the strategies of the 9 (placating, merging, passive aggression, etc). It has been my experience that the tritype seems to play itself out most obviously in relationships with others.

Another 9 may have the 935 or "The Thinker" Tritype that will present very differently according to Fauvre. The 935 will utilize the Type 9 strategy as dominant, but after exhausting wings and lines of connection, will move to Type 3 and become more expedient, professional, or image focused, and then to Type 5 and become more cerebral, remote, and concealed. This Tritype combination will seem significantly different from the 927.

A 9-5-3 would be the kind of 9 who is more intellectual (5), perfectionistic and focused on efficiency (3) with less of an emphasis on maintaining harmonious relationships compared to other 9s.

5-9-3: Most success-oriented Five. Needs prestige, especially if SOC.

Five with a nine fix: pattern seeking above all. Whimsical exploration, disposition of reluctant idealist. Open-minded, philosophical perspective. Can seem to lack focus while associating groupings of information into larger theories. Likes people and humanity as a whole, shares ideas, and is relatively easy to get along with.

So the question is, how to not be so “hidden”? This is, I consider—an Achilles' heel of our tritype. And to be fair, this hidden-ness has a tendency of being extreme to the point that even saying “I” or “me” too much becomes a chore and a source of discomfort to acknowledge it. It is a skill that I picked up in very early years, and thus almost effectively erased from dialogue with others. Rarely have people caught onto this tendency, but when they do, I purposely use it more to thwart anyone's suspicion. 359s are incredibly self-aware, that's for sure. Onlookers may mistake this for emotional intensity, but...359s have a mental intensity which can be confused for intense emotion (and may externalize as such). They are hidden and also very skilled mirrors. Their dry, cool wit and initial friendliness is masked with its contrary extremes underneath.

To give a picture of how a 359 in action is like:

I will draw from my example. I have been incredibly drawn to debates and discourses, but while I may be equipped with the knowledge of both points (and how to destroy the debate), this 359 stops at once from getting involved. In some cases, I have silenced myself to the point that by the time there is an opportunity to speak, my mind is ineffectively blank. And nothing is there anymore. There is a very constant sense of self and group alienation. 3 wants to maintain the image, 5 wants to dish the truth out there for everyone to hear, 9 is good at compromising and understanding other points of view but has its own explosive moments of anger. This, in nature, reminds me of 8w9's behavior in terms of their anger coping mechanism.

I suspect that 359s are also “universal appeasers”, as in...in the midst of a discourse, they may not attack the person, but stay extremely focused on the universal issue. This may awe the opposing party, as it seems that we are taking in consideration of their point, but the 359 simply ignores the fact that it is a person, and decides to focus on the person as the “thought”, not the ego. This is what makes them so adept at discourse. A few pointed out to me that they admired my method of breaking down arguments to the very essence, and not breaking down someone else for the thought they are “responsible” for. But let's be real. In a way, we really couldn't care any less. Because if you focus so much on pleasing them, you'll be paralyzed from ever participating. The only way I can find myself bypassing this issue is by erasing everyone's ego and analyzing the issue as if it were an object.

I would go so far to say that learning about MBTI / Enneagram / Socionics can turn a 359 less authentic as they are pressured more to live up to the descriptions of their type. Others who are knowledgeable about MBTI have a tendency to scrutinize each other and “confirm” each other's typing. In my case, I'm a ENTP. As I lack the stereotypical 7w8 traits that seem prominent in online ENTP descriptions, I may even purposely mimic 7w8 tendencies as to not rouse doubt of others. I myself have no doubt in how I metabolize information and process it, but can be strangely concerned about how others may see it.

“First, a few key words would probably be observation, inertia, and anxiety. The withdrawn nature of the 5 and 9 types means I struggle to actively engage in life in most cases, which creates a lot of problems. The core 5 is obviously the most important thing to relate here. I can see you're typed as a 5w4, but due to me having a quite phobic 6 wing to exacerbate the already problematic anxiety of the 5, odds are good we have some different experiences. Suffice it to say, the phobic 6 wing and dominant sp instinct bring with it a rather poor relationship with the outside world.

The impact of the other types is I suppose what you are really after here, so I'm just going to address that. One of the most obvious things about any type 9 is the characteristic inertia, the aloofness, the unwillingness to assert and the tendency to minimize chaos in the environment, and these qualities are all present to some extent. Type 5s already typically have issues being assertive and inhabiting their body fully (the reason for the line to 8) and the 9 disconnect from the physical self only compounds that problem. 5s and 9s approach needs in similar ways, with 5s minimizing their needs and 9s denying theirs even exist. This creates huge problems when it comes to engaging with the world, as a 593 exists in a state of being too disconnected with their own desires.

The presence of the 9 seems to make the 5s nature to withdraw and prepare worse, we seem less likely to feel competent enough to engage with the world than other 5s. There is an especially profound feeling of experiencing life from the outside, always observing, never acting. 3 brings with it a chameleon like nature, but also a tendency for perfectionism and even occasional elitism. When it comes to sociability in general, I feel that short description rings true."

"I am a 9w1 3w2 5w6 sp/so, with a bit of integration towards 3. I get a sense of extreme detachment from other people (9 and 5 working together, plus the sp instinct as well). I'm content to be a part of the background, but people don't really notice me (although a part of me, the 3, wants to be noticed on some level. It's just the 9 and 5 in me that reject that part of me). I consider myself easy going, too, at the expense of being assertive; I'll often say "yes" to something before really thinking about what I'm being asked to do.

I also consider myself goal-oriented, but quietly so; I don't create a lot of fanfare out of it. There's also this sense that I'm observing others and mentally commenting on their behavior, but I never fully get out of that state of mental inertia to fully interact with them. I am sometimes very aloof, but I can also be warm, smiling, and witty—I flip flop a lot, which confuses the heck out of people who don't know me well. I definitely give people that "hard to read" vibe. I definitely have a poor relationship with the outside world, even physically, and I get anxious about my performance in the social arena--especially with sx last, there's this sense that I don't engage enough with any aspect of my life really deeply and thoroughly.

5 and 3 are both competence types, so there's a bit of anxiety for me about that; and when I don't do as well as I expected in all areas of life, I beat myself up for it (strong 1 wing). Yet I don't want other people criticizing my ideas; in fact, if I get criticized I totally shut down. With 3 in the tritype, yeah, there's a bit of concern with image, literally so; I'm very careful with my physical appearance in relation to how other people will see me."

5-3-9: These Fives might strike others as rather pleasant and cooperative persons, but they're usually more ambitious and purposeful than they let on. They're goal-oriented individualists who dream of achieving an impressive and long-lasting success in their field – they secretly desire becoming famous and leaving their mark on the world. These Fives are also more dependent on outer validation than others – they care more about their image and the way others perceive and react to them. Therefore, they might seem a little more conventional and mainstream in their behavior.

Typical subtypes: social, self-preserving, balanced wings

Similar tritypes: 5-9-3, 9-5-3

Flavors: cunning, congenial, goal-oriented, and flexible

5-9-3: These Fives are naturally diplomatic, peaceful, and somewhat charismatic. They care about harmony and balance and are a bit anxious of people's rejection and disapproval. Very sentient and tactful, they know how to reach their objectives without causing much fuss around them – they go with the flow and adapt to people and situations easily. They're the type of people that others don't see coming, skillfully speculating opportunities to their advantage while keeping a low profile.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, social, 5w6

Similar tritypes: 5-3-9, 9-5-3

Flavors: tactful, well-mannered, collected, and adaptable

368 – The Justice Fighter Archetype

368/386: Inquisitive and direct 3. This is the most provocative and loyal 3. A true debater, this is the most industrious, rebellious and anti-authoritarian 3. A natural leader and justice fighter, they can be mistaken for an 8. The core fears are of failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

638/683: Direct and focused 6. Can appear 3ish or 8ish. This is the justice fighter 6. These 6s are good achievers and debaters. They are the most confrontational 6. They are usually the CP6 and make good trial attorneys. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, failure, being incapable, unable to do, inefficient, second best, and unmasked.

836/863: Focused and inquisitive 8. This 8 is most likely to debate and challenge. A true fighter and justice-maker, this 8 is provocative and confrontational. This 8 has a legalistic streak and is focused on protecting the underdog, especially if a social subtype. Can be mistyped as a 3. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, fear, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

Gut: 8 Heart: 3 Head: 6

Anger Management

- 368s are the most confrontational and argumentative archetype of all. They can be very persistent if they think something's off in their environment, and will be passionate about unearthing the truth;

Relation with Rules & Regulations

- 368s are rule followers until they consider said rule to be unfair and/or limiting. They then become antagonistic toward the established order and will try to defend their view at all cost;

Independence

- 368s are the most independent and strong-willed of the three archetypes. Their own sense of justice prevents them from totally agreeing with their environment. This archetype might try to make its own rules;

Competitiveness

- 368s jump into the action the quickest and project an image of fearless and relentless assault in order to hide their own insecurities. They are very persistent and tough to convince otherwise once their mind is settled on something;

Focus of Attention

- 368s are focusing on potential dangers or abnormalities that might undermine their tough and fearless persona. They are also very preoccupied by power struggles and imbalances;

Protectiveness

- 368s are very protective of vulnerable and exploited groups and/or individuals. Injustice is abhorred and must be taken down by any means possible. They will fight for someone if they are being abused (a bit like 268s);

Social Roles

- 368s are the debater and opposition leader who want to be the perfect soldier or the ultimate nail in the coffin for their detractors;

Dealing with emotions

- 368s aren't very comfortable with emotions at all and feel that they might be a hindrance to reaching their goals and meeting expectations;

Shame

- 368s are often shameless (especially if social) in adapting to the current need of people. They want to be the best at meeting their demands and protect them in exchange;

Potential Problems

- 368s are very reactive and impulsive, and so can overreact and can perceive illusory conflicts and power struggles when there aren't any. They also have a tendency to talk back or say too much too quickly before accurately assessing the situation, putting their credibility in jeopardy at times. They ought to slow down and think before opening their mouth and reacting to any potential things that they don't agree with (this trait is shared with all the SIX and EIGHT combinations). As the most aggressive and combative tritype of all the 27 archetypes, they may allow more time in their routine to relax and shift their focus of attention to body care and well-being;

Patterns & Structure

- 368s are triple confronting and aggressive. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to engage and/or decry injustice and inequalities among various situations (depending on the subtype). They want facts and things to be crystal clear and hate contradictions, and so can brush off any inconsistencies in order to eschew incongruence and open criticism.

Combined with dominant self-preservation, this tritype is extremely hard-working and enduring. This is a less openly aggressive manifestation of this tritype, as here the motivation is to keep them from experimenting material woes, and because of that they can be very rigid and combative of any inconsistencies or threats regarding that matter.

Sexual variant with this archetype is very intense and confronting, especially if their loved ones are involved. They want total respect from them (a bit of submission also) and in exchange can be destroying any detractors. They have a very hard time accepting betrayals and are more emotional than the other two subtypes. They can be surprisingly submissive to their partners.

The social subtype support and defend their crew in exchange for group security and trust. They can be found as the organization representative or leader (often political) and are very oppositional to any differing views;

Interests:

- fighting for justice
- achieving success

Mission:

- protecting those in need and seeking justice

Blind spot:

- overly obsessed with unfairness, becoming confrontational, against authorities

Fears:

- fear
- accepting injustice
- appearing to be a coward
- not being good enough

If you are a 368, you are ambitious, inquisitive, and protective. You want to be accomplished, loyal, and straightforward. Verbally adept and a good reader of people and situations, you have the ability to identify unjust authority, rebel against tyranny, and verbally spar against it. You want to get along with others, but can struggle with being too direct and outspoken. You will identify with being an 8 because the descriptions of 8 fit this Tritype® the most.

Your life mission is to challenge what is unfair and protect the innocent. A true justice fighter, you are happiest when you can use your protective energy and debating skills in service of others or a cause.

Your blind spot is that you can be so identified with challenging what you perceive as unfair that you become overbearing, confrontational, anti-authoritarian, and indifferent to the wisdom of emotional intelligence and your tender emotions. Characterized by confrontation. Immovably disagreeable. They stay firm in their direction and beliefs and won't let anyone but themselves change that. Your growing edge is to recognize that your need to challenge and oppose can keep you from knowing who you are or what you feel. True protection comes from being in alignment with your higher self and knowing when to intervene and when to allow events to unfold. The Justice Fighter is very dynamic. This is the toughest fighter on the Enneagram. They focus on justice and are quick to react and seek the advantage in the service of justice.

I was asked the differences between the 361, the 368, and the 369 tritypes. Since the question is which gut type is dominant. At a glance, it is most helpful to look at activity levels. The 361 is very industrious and busy doing to avoid anxiety, the 1 brings a need to do what is morally correct. The 368 is focused on fighting for justice, the 8 brings a need to overcome and prevail. The 369 is highly adaptable and focused on being in comfortable alignment with others.

Sensitivity is not their greatest strength, but it does not mean that the 863 does not care. They care a great deal, but they are hardwired to instantly go into action before they have had a chance to even think about it.

The cp6 with the 683 Tritype® does not want to be “in trouble” with anyone and has a fundamental fear of being “blamed for something they did not do.” So, they can find that apologizing for something they never intended makes them feel uncomfortable.

“These Tritypes with type 6 leading are paradoxical. Ironically, the 6s with this Tritype are the most hyper-reactive 6, but they are still tentative and apprehensive. Their mental projections can make their reactions very confusing to others. They may at times show their anxiety and look timid and in need of support, and at other times they can be so intensely assertive and provocative that their needs go unseen. The high side of these Tritypes is that they are extremely devoted and dutiful to those to whom they are attached. They are very loyal and protective.”

The sx 683 is a very dynamic 6. This tritype has consistently reported being predominantly counter-phobic. A true fighter, this tritype goes the distance for others. This tritype with 6 dominant is very loyal, feisty, and achievement oriented.

The 368 Tritype® is one of the more complex and misunderstood Tritypes®. It is easy to identify this Tritype® as the focus of attention is very direct, but determining which type is in the lead can be difficult. The 368, in any order, will produce a focused and efficient (3), provocative and questioning (6), confrontational and protective (8) defense strategy. This intersection of 3, 6, and 8 will create a very loyal, driven, strong-willed, and justice-seeking individual. This sounds very much the way 8 is often described. So, understandably, the 3 and 6 with the 368 Tritype® will frequently mistype as the 8. Eventually, the 3 will see that they lead with 3 because of their need to be seen as a successful person. With the 6, it is more difficult, as so many of the counter-phobic (cp6) traits and behaviors can appear to be 8-like at first glance.

I have found that even though the 6 may mistype as other types initially, they will accurately identify one or two of the actual types in their Tritype®. They will simply identify with one of the other types in their Tritype® even though it is not their primary type. The softer, more phobic 6 will generally have the 9 in their Tritype® and the stronger, more reactive counter-phobic (cp6) will usually have the 8 in their Tritype®.

So, the cp683 or cp638 when combined with the two assertive, results-driven types of 3 and 8 will be very aggressive and naturally mistype as the 8. The reason for this is that the 368 Tritype® is the most confrontational and protective Tritype®. They are also very focused and fierce. If this Tritype® has the social instinct, the focus on fighting for truth and justice in the service of others will be amplified.

Many ‘special forces’ warriors are the 638 Tritype®. Special forces, or special operations forces, are military units trained to perform unconventional missions that require teamwork. The 368 Tritype® is well suited for this type of work, as they often possess the ability to develop mind over matter and work as a part of a cohesive team. They also make great debaters, trial attorneys, emergency services personnel, policemen, firefighters, and social workers.

So, to accurately determine the lead type with the 368 Tritype®, it is very important to listen to the language the 368 uses, pay attention to the expressions they make and track their body language.

The 368 or 386 will often use sports metaphors like, “I am a winner” or see themselves as a “lean machine”, or frequently say they or you should “just do it.” They are hard workers. They will focus on achieving their personal best and developing a winning image. Likewise, they have very little patience for whiners and are able to push their limits to acquire the skills they need to be a star. They will talk about their achievements and successes and may have a somewhat machine-like, robotic efficiency to everything they do. They usually embody the role they wish to possess and become the ideal exemplar. The energy is in the eyes and the chest region. They track you tracking them. They are sensitive to expectations and often have practiced skills of looking attentive, but are often distant and focused on what they need to do to be seen as valuable in your eyes.

The 638 or 683 will want to protect others from being misled by unsavory characters and/or fear for those they perceive as a target or unprotected. So, they will warn and caution others, cite authorities to prove their point of view and seek “worthy” authorities they can respect. They can speak in a way that sows the seeds of doubt. They will focus on what is fair and just and pay attention to ways they can protect the every man. Likewise, they will be authoritarian and challenge authorities they fear will mislead others. The energy is in and around the head. They will have many facial expressions that rapidly change. You can see this along the brow bone and in the eyes. If they have learned mind over matter, they may reduce the rapid change of expression with a mask-like appearance of strength and fierceness.

The 863 or 836 will use war metaphors and will take charge to ensure justice. They are the justice-maker and become their own authority. They are the same in and out of the public eye. Likewise, they don't try to impress like the 368 or 386. Nor do they try to prove anything to anyone, nor cite authorities or challenge other authorities like the 638 and 683. They are the authority. They may fact-check, but as people of action, they do not like pretenses or care about having a good image like the 368 and 386 or ‘heady’ debates they way the 638 and 683 does. With the 836 and 863 what you see is truly what you get. They are action-oriented people with a strong sense of self-defined justice. They will often exhibit a tender side and use ‘might’ to make right to protect the underdog, the weak, the vulnerable, the downtrodden and/or the underrepresented. Furthermore, they are steady and very consistent in their nonchalant yet intimidating stance of defiance. The energy is the lower region of the belly. If they think something is ‘bull’ they will typically turn their nose up in disgust with their lips turned down. Their expression is unwavering and their intimidation is often unspoken.

(3)-6-8 : The Reactive 3

3-(6)-8 : The Aggressive 6

3-6-(8) : The Normative 8

Characterized by confrontation. Immovably disagreeable. They stay firm in their direction and beliefs and won't let anyone but themselves change that.

For some, it depends on what type you put first. For example:

6-83: Debater

8-63: Justice fighter

3-68: Some sort of image-conscious justice preacher

Eight with a three fix: the notably success-oriented, prominence-seeking eight. Utilizes image and manipulation to advance their career or enterprise. Business achievement can lead to political aspirations.

8 in any trifix tends to give license to the other fixes to just “be” unapologetically. It’s not automatic aggression, but rather an allowance of being. With 6 fix, that means questioning and calling out inconsistencies/untruths is louder and more shameless. 8 tends to be uncomfortable with the natural need of 6 to submit, and so it tends to make 6 more counter-phobic and less trusting/warm/friendly. 8 being a reactive type brings 6 into a place where it expects more negativity and can be unapologetically bold.

If you examine this by tritype, you will find that we identify with this definition in a specific way. For example, as a sexual 874, I like to do my thing and execute what interests me and will push myself for my intimates...but I do not like to prepare and perform. The 873 would feel more comfortable performing, the 863 preparing and so on.

The 368 is very dynamic. This is the toughest fighter on the Enneagram. They focus on justice and are quick to react and seek the advantage in the service of justice. The 6 with this tritype identifies with type 8 and is counter-phobic.

368: Bitingly challenges doubtful things and will drag out information, they’ll find the truth, hellbent on it. I want to be recognized for my tough perseverance in challenging what I find questionable. Not afraid to call out bullshit or argue. Charmer, smooth talker, but if they really want something they’ll fight for it. A bit impulsive, risk-taking, but probably well known for this. Confident in themselves on the surface, but extreme skeptic at the same time, including of themselves.

The 846 is one of the most confrontational tritypes. The other is the 836. The 6 amplifies the 8 need for loyalty and trust.

It has long been thought that the 378 is the most assertive Tritype because the 3, 7, and 8 are the assertive type in the triad in which they reside. The 3 is the assertive heart type, the 7 is the assertive head type and the 8 is the assertive gut type. And to a large degree this is true... however...the 368 is actually more aggressive than the 378, but why?

This is a great question because both of these Tritypes are assertive. In general terms, the definition of aggressive is usually equated with being combative, angry, and quarrelsome whereas assertive is often defined as being bold or confident in behavior, manner, or style.

Both definitions fit aspects of both Tritypes. Both the 378 and the 368 are assertive and/or aggressive, but in different ways.

An important note is that any type can be aggressive, just as any type can be intelligent, sad, or lonely, etc. What we want to consider is why and how an emotion is overused and how it is used as a defense strategy.

I love my analogies... in large part because I have found that people learn faster when they understand the archetypal energies of Types, Tritypes, and Instinctual Types. If we compare and contrast the ‘Gestalt’ of the energies present, it is easier to see the nuances of type.

In general terms...

The 378s are the politicians, whereas the 368s are those in the Special Forces.

The 378s are the bombers, whereas the 368s are the tanks and torpedoes.

The 378s are the lions, whereas the 368s are the honey badgers.

The 368 is also a very dynamic combination of types. And all 3 of these types also deny emotion in favor of doing like the 378. A key difference between the 378 and the 368 is their relationship to authority.

The 368s are fierce competitors that seek intensity. The 3 loves the energy that comes from setting and achieving a goal, the 6 loves the energy that comes from overcoming doubt and proving to themselves that they won't be paralyzed by fear and anxiety, and the 8 loves the energy that comes from personal empowerment and overcoming obstacles.

The 6 and 8 both focus on loyalty and justice, and are willing to publicly or privately challenge injustice. The 6 seeks an authority figure that is fair and just, and the 8 sees themselves as a justice-maker.

The 3 and 6 both adjust according to their circumstances... The 3 adapts to manage the expectations of others and to be seen as the ideal person, and the 6 adjusts to their situation so as to not be targeted by others or be 'in trouble' with others.

And, the 3 and 8 are both highly competitive and want to win... The 3 wants to be seen as the best and a winner, and the 8 wants to have the power to prevail against all odds.

So, when these types are combined, they have a shared world-view that is focused on being loyal, determined, protective, security-driven and results-oriented winners that seek to ensure justice. As such, they are ideally suited to be the guardians of justice.

Special note:

When the 6 and 8 are combined in a Tritype the 6 becomes counter-phobic (cp). So when you have the assertive 3 and assertive 8 combined with the counter-phobic 6 you have the most intense, single-minded, fiercely competitive, and protective Tritype. They often warn others of hazards or work in fields that specialize in work that requires tracking risks and developing mind over matter. Because the 6 is cp6, they do not appear to be fearful themselves and are often in careers such as the military, law enforcement, or information-security.

369 – The Mediator Archetype

369/396: Inquisitive and accepting 3. This is the most cautious and adaptable 3 and tends to adjust their presentation to match their environment to avoid experiencing doubt. This 3 needs harmony and balance. Seeks reassurance to feel accepted. The core fears are of being a failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

639/696: Accepting and focused 6. This 6 seeks security by avoiding conflict and fitting in. Depending on the situation, this 6 is accommodating or professional. This 6 is the most inclined to bounce between 3-6-9. This 6 avoids trouble and is more obedient and less rebellious. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked.

936/963: Focused and inquisitive 9. Needs balance and harmony to keep the peace. A true shape-shifter, this 9 is inclined to move from a 9 to 3 to 6 to get along with others and avoid conflict. This 9 swings from belief and hope, to doubt and concern. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, fear, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

Gut: 9 Heart: 3 Head: 6

Anger Management

- 369s are the most adaptable of all the 27 archetypes and will try to steer away from manifesting their frustration in favor of maintaining the overall harmony;

Relation with Rules & Regulations

- 369s prefer to adapt and follow the current regulations and are uncomfortable criticizing the way things are done if they aren't in an authority position;

Independence

- 369s don't like to stray too far from what's expected from them because they may disappoint the authority and potentially make a fool of themselves;

Energy Levels

- 369s are the most adaptable and versatile. They could very much fit anywhere because merging with the task and environment gives them security;

Role Fits

- 369s fit the everyman/woman persona to a T. They are great at maintaining good relationships between opposing parties and keeps things running smoothly;

Information Gathering

- 369s use shared information, outside rules, and authority figures in order to better conform into a designated role or do a specific task;

Extraversion & Energy Levels

- 369s are more extroverted and like to be recognized for their contribution. They are more chameleon-like in their overall demeanor;

Anxiety Triggers

- 369s cope with anxiety by shapeshifting into the more desirable and safe man/woman of any given situation. When they fail to accurately identify the best outcome to morph into, that's when anxiety kicks in;

Aggressiveness

- 369s channel their aggressive side into their work. While they don't like showing their angry face to others, they are a little more straightforward in showing it and can become argumentative at times;

Potential Problems

- 369s are so adept at shapeshifting that they often become asleep to their own needs and identity. They also want to be the best people for every situation they encounter, which can be unintentionally obnoxious or annoying for others. They may be seen as opportunistic and fake, even though they almost always strive to be accepted. This tritype may need to learn to slow down and learn how to look inside themselves in order to discover their true needs;

Patterns & Structure

- 369s are triple adapters and the most shapeshifting tritype of all. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that try to merge into what is expected of them to be, and this is typically a very instinctive way for this tritype to be readily accepted from their peers.

A self-preservation 369 will be less openly merging with its environment, but can deliver strong work ethics without being too adamant about taking up the spotlight. A very down-to-earth subtype that is more discreet and humble than the other two variants.

The sexual 369 is a bit more fluid and attentive to the needs of others, especially the few special ones. They are also a bit more emotional and may show a bit more of their vulnerable side than the other two subtypes.

The social 369 is the classical description of the tritype. Very engaged and quick to act, they like to strive for recognition while looking at outside authority in order to get the best outcome

Interests:

- want harmony and want to fit in
- achieving goals

Mission:

- bringing people together and finding peace

Blind spots:

- overly focused on fitting in, ignoring what's important for yourself
- ignoring negative emotions

Fears:

- not being accepted
- conflict
- danger

If you are a 369, you are ambitious, inquisitive, and accepting. You want to be successful, engaged, and peaceful. You seek peace, balance, and harmony. Furthermore, you want to know what is expected of you and will adjust your behavior to succeed. You need affirmation, reassurance, and a sense of wellbeing to feel connected to yourself and others. You have an amazing ability to adapt to circumstances and are often seen as the nice person.

639: Fear of being seen as unsuccessful or weak. Money and successful-image provides safety (6), comfort and harmony (9). Core fear: having no support system (it can be money, friends, or family) when (if) they fail. Can be a bit of a people pleaser and chameleon-like to protect their image in society by not harming harmony and balance, but still ambitious. One of the most balanced 6 tritypes and the other one is 693.

I was asked the differences between the 361, the 368, and the 369 tritypes. Since the question is which gut type is dominant. At a glance, it is most helpful to look at activity levels. The 361 is very industrious and busy doing to avoid anxiety, the 1 brings a need to do what is morally correct. The 368 is focused on fighting for justice, the 8 brings a need to overcome and prevail. The 369 is highly adaptable and focused on being in comfortable alignment with others.

The mediator tritype needs to be seen, successful, and at peace. Your emotional energy goes towards seeking attachments with ideas and others. You want to be bonded to people. You also want to create balance and are uncomfortable with extremes. Furthermore, you tend to see relationships as a part of yourself. This tritype would be most characterized by being influenced by their society. They usually embody everything that their society is. They need to adapt in order to relieve tension and stress. Overall, you are positively identified with others and may have amnesia for the more difficult or negative aspects of your relationships. This is the most common tritype, due to its path of development. This type is a complete direction of integration (3 to 6 to 9) and therefore often very fulfilled.

369- Less directly confrontational than 368, but still likely to ruminate over information that doesn't sit well with them. Silent watcher. Tight-lipped, yet thinking over everything. Outwardly politely smiling. Probably generally well liked, fits in, less likely to point out injustices to others or themselves but will silently consider them. Adjust to a situation to look their best and maintain a positive social image, even if they don't necessarily agree with it because of the 9. Probably wants to be recognized for how peaceful and serene they are (seem).

She said this is the type most likely to be able to be the chameleon and will be able to adjust themselves according to whomever they are around. Having the 3 relating types and the 3 primary types, they can have the most difficulty pinpointing not only their tritype but their dominant strategy. She said they will almost always think they are 3s, because they will value success and will be inclined to adjust to fit a given situation. She said they need to stay engaged and have harmony to feel happy, which is what causes the constant adjustment.

They are most likely to fit into the cultural milieu of what is expected of them but that their life mission is to bring harmony, and she calls this the true mediator archetype. She said they can be so focused on fitting in and belonging that they lose themselves and forget to speak their personal truths for fear of not relating to others.

The 369 needs to adjust to feel seen, safe, and peaceful.

Triple balancing tritype that avoids going into extremes at all costs.

You have all three Bonders Enneacards

(Enneagram Types: 3, 6 & 9) in your Enneaspread.

639 or 629 tritype. Anxious, warm, congenial, and phobic.

The 9 fix by contrast tends to allow 6 to stay longer in a state of questioning ambivalence. 6 still wants to find a structure/truth, but 9 allows more back and forth. Both 6 and 9 have trouble being solid. With 6+9's, one might get the sense that they're playing with ideas rather than how the 6+1 insists on finding one specific outcome. The 6+9 might settle on an outcome, but spend more time re-questioning and vacillating. 9 as a withdrawn energy pulls the 6 fix into a place where it needs permission to exist fully and trust itself.

Any combination that has a 6 runs anxiety. Any tritype that has self-pres as the dominant instinct is motivated by anxiety. The tritypes that tend to run high anxiety are the 614 and 694... and then 629 and 639.

9 and 6 both accommodate others, 9 to prevent conflict and achieve external peace and 6 to maintain a support system and prevent others from abandoning them

3-6-9: The Citizen

The 639 Tritype® is the primary Tritype® and the most amenable and adaptable of the 27. This Tritype® includes the core type of each center of intelligence. The core of each center is seeking to balance the opposites within each center to create resolution. The core of each center is usually out of touch with the focus of their respective center and tend to be caught in the dance of opposites created by the opposing defense strategies of the wings in each center. So the 6 as the center of the head triad struggles to trust themselves and their own inner guidance. They oscillate between feeling they need to be an expert about something, or feeling they need to know a little about everything to feel safe.

The 3 is trying to manage the overall fear of being ignored, the 6 is trying to manage the fear of fear itself and chaos, and the 9 is trying to manage the fear of being overlooked and unimportant. Together, the focus is on creating, restoring, and maintaining peaceful relating.

If your Tritype® is the 369, it reinforces the primary issues. As a result, neutralizing conflict is a primary concern.

The 7 wing gives the 6 a lighter touch and a desire to manage stress with quick-witted, often self-deprecating humor. So, the 6w7 with the 639 is the friendly boy or girl next door that wants to engage with others as a means of survival.

This strategy is true even if the person is shy. And, the extroverted 639 still feels cautious and/or has doubts, but the extraversion makes it easier to bridge their shyness by saying something funny and/or witty. The introverted 639 uses their shy smile to disarm and engage others.

The Self Preserving 639

The self-preserving 639 is preoccupied with their physical needs. They focus on their sense of security and what will keep them feeling safe, nurtured, and comfortable. They tend to worry about everything associated with their essential needs, focusing on the demands of their home, job, pension, and family, etc.

Being disarming and friendly are tools of the trade for the self-preserving 6. And a friendly, socially acceptable partner may be considered just as important as a good job, as both reinforce that they have what they require in times of uncertainty. As such, they monitor their physical needs and resources to gauge if they are safe and secure. To maintain a sense of well-being, they may also track the physical needs of their designated other(s). This can be exhausting and feel difficult to manage, so they often keep their world small, letting in only one person or a trusted few.

The Social 639

The social 639 is preoccupied with their place or position within the group(s) of their choosing. Ideally, their group needs to be considered socially acceptable, and their partner needs to be considered friendly and successful to insure and maintain the security that comes from status.

They focus on being dutiful and supportive to the people, beliefs, values, and/or creeds they have decided to align with. As such, they monitor who is doing what with whom and whether they feel included and secure. To maintain their security, they seek a role or position within their group(s) and family systems to insure they have others that will come to their aid should they need it. They see themselves as dedicated and loyal to the people in their lives. They instinctively shape-shift and become what their others require in order to be deemed worthy of admiration and protection.

The Sexual 639

The sexual 639 is preoccupied with selecting and/or being a desirable and irresistible alpha mate. They are more intense and counter-phobic than the self-preserving and social 6. They seek intensity and chemistry in their intimate relationships and tend to push the edge in whatever they do. They manage their fears and anxiety by jumping into situations that cause distress, proving to themselves that they are strong enough to manage whatever feels threatening. They can move from fear to action in nanoseconds when they have already projected a worst-case scenario and have prepared for it. As a result, they may not identify with having fear.

The sexual 639 focuses on having and being strong enough and/or beautiful enough to attract a desirable mate that will stand beside them and protect them when they feel insecure. Strength may mean physical strength and beauty, or can be defined as someone that is extremely smart and competent. Ideally, they want their mate and close friends to be extraordinary in some way they feel they are not. As such, they may choose a mate that they think is smarter than most so that they feel they have all of their bases covered. To that end, they adapt to what their mate or partners want to insure they have their special someone that will stand together with them against an uncertain world.

This tritype would be most characterized by being influenced by their society. They usually embody everything that their society is. They need to adapt in order to relieve tension and stress.

[by timeless:] You'll hear that 3-6-9 is the most common tritype. I believe that this is true, but this is no quirk of the enneagram, nor is it random chance. You'll notice that 3, 6, and 9 are id, superego, and ego types. The Type 3 element is constantly seeking to improve themselves, the Type 6 element is constantly seeking to improve their superego, and Type 9 is constantly seeking to mediate themselves. In a way, this is the healthiest tritype in Freudian terms. This explains why 3-6-9 is the most common tritype: this is probably the optimal path of development.

[by Grey:] The 3-6-9 triangle has to do with the fact that they all line up together in their integration/disintegration lines, creating an endless triangle.

The 3 and the 9 were total opposites of one another (external cultivation vs internal), and the 6 really was somewhere in the middle.

3-6-9 Triple attachment type

The attachment types (3-6-9) are most comfortable between the norming and performing phases, when everything's going smoothly and people know what's going on.

Those with the 3-6-9 tritype, especially 9s, have a considerable amount of confusion around their identities. Type 9 is already the seeker, but 3 and 6 add more elements around the feeling of lacking a clearly defined identity.

This whole tritype's core need is to focus on maintaining balance and avoiding extremes, all the while being successful.

All three types in this Tritype® adapt, modify, and seek balance... more importantly, they naturally pay attention to what they relate to and/or identify.

The 369 is the primary Tritype® because it has all three types that represent the center of each center of intelligence. This makes it more difficult to see oneself and the defense strategies used. The 369 Tritype® is meant to track behaviors and the situation at hand, rather than defense strategies and motivations. This is what makes it difficult to self-type.

So, I suggest that you track the defense strategy you use in each center. You need to be able to observe the ego's idealized images, core fears, and the actual defense strategies of these three types.

For what it is worth... the heart type is often the type 3. The 963 has the most trouble determining their Tritype® because they have access to all 9 types. If you are the 963 Tritype®, you may remain unconvinced for a long time...because it is part of the defense strategy of type 9 to see all points of view but to remain unconvinced by any... ;)

The 369 Tritype®, in any order, tries to be the ideal, boy or girl next door, company man or woman, the pleasant, likable person that adapts to the people or situations at hand to remain being seen as a good role model (even if they are counter-culture because they adapt accordingly). They are trying to hold both expressions of their center, but secretly feel opinionated in ways they can only express with others that feel the same way. They fear they would be rejected if they share their opinions without first reading the person in front of them to judge if they can.

The 3 adapts their behavior to avoid being unimpressive. Instead, they show their best side by giving a good impression and image.

The 6 adapts their behavior to avoid being targeted or blamed. Instead, they show their friendly side to be included and seen as likable.

The 9 adapts their behavior to avoid being separate from others. Instead, they show their easygoing side and will go along to get along.

The 369 Tritype® is the most adaptable type. Through their wing types, they reach all 9 types faster than any other Tritype® which is why they are the 'core' types and core Tritype®. They are commonly known as:

3 is the chameleon, beaver, or peacock becoming the industrious 'ideal' person.

6 is the everyman or everywoman, the boy or girl next door becoming the friendly 'likable' person.

9 is the shapeshifter, an easy-going person becoming the pleasant and 'accepting' person.

The 3, 6, and 9 types are the most “archetypal” and yet forgetful of each of their centers in a sense. They're like the “every man” who is so adaptable to everyone around them and their environment that they can lose themselves, forget who they are. They also make excellent conduits, though. David Grey also calls them: the universal citizen, the stressed emulator, the porous ego, the collective chameleon, and the ambitious sponge.

The 369s and 369 Tritype®:

The 3, 6, and 9 seem to hide in plain sight so to speak. Why? Because they naturally adapt to people and situations to be admired, to belong, and be accepted.

In your Tritype®, you can have all primary types, all hexad types, or a combination of primary types and hexad types.

The more primary types you have in your Tritype®, the more adaptable and even-keeled you are. The 369 Tritype® has the well-rounded types that have the defense strategies that adapt to succeed. They are the traditional problem solvers but as a result, they are less individualistic.

The more hexad types you have in your Tritype® the more creative and individualistic you are. The 478 Tritype® has the most specialized types that have the defense strategies that are independent. They are creative problem-solvers but as a result, they are less adaptable.

Also:

The more primary types you have in your Tritype®, the closer you are to the core Tritype® of the 369. And as such, the more adaptable and dependent you are on others.

The more hexad types you have in your Tritype® the further you are from the core Tritype® of the 369. And as such, the more individualistic and independent you are.

9-3-6 | unconscious emotional background | attachment challenges | the robotic or habitual ego

Summary | These 3 types rely on their habitual ways of functioning, ways that block them from full access to their body, heart and/or mind. For the body (most obvious in type 9): an awakened body stability. For the heart (most obvious in type 3): a truly open heart. For the mind (most obvious in type 6): a self-confident, still mind.

Type 9 | Needing familiar environments, relationships and comfort, as well as routines and a sense of wellness to return them a profound “sense of self”.

Type 3 | Needing to impact people through promoting a positive impression of themselves to provide a profound “sense of identity”.

Type 6 | Searching for something to permanently rely on to feel safe – for example, constantly downloading information, looking to others for guidance, and/or creating continuous anticipatory scenarios – to provide a profound “sense of direction, guidance, and support”.

Attachment - 369

The struggle between individuation and adaptation

3: Being or doing whatever it takes to gain unconditional love

6: Creating maps to support systems at the detriment of your own inner faith and decisiveness

9: The ego and body itself over-adapting by being in unity

Types 3, 6, & 9 are in the Pragmatist group, and they relate to the world by blending in and thriving.

Each of these types seek their own place in the world (and they attach to what makes that work for them pragmatically, which is why Riso & Hudson call this group the Attachment Triad).

Type 3s in the Pragmatist Group

3s seek a sustaining place, and they attach to what keeps them recognized. Type 3s have lost knowing that ‘being’ can manifest in the day-to-day world.

Type 6s in the Pragmatist Group

6s seek a secure place, and they attach to what keeps them stable. Type 6s have lost faith that knowing the quality of ‘being’ can manifest enough security in the day-to-day world.

Type 9s in the Pragmatist Group

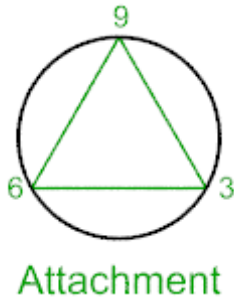

9s seek a comfortable place, and they attach to what keeps them conflict free. Type 9s have lost the quality of true love of themselves, which is equal to love that they give others.

Advice for The Pragmatist Group

Learn to let go of worldly attachments and allow in discomfort, which will allow you to integrate into the higher qualities of the day-to-day world.

Types 3-6-9 can be called the Pragmatists, as they relate to how we blend into, align with, and thrive alongside others in the world. Don Riso and Russ Hudson call these types the “Attachment Triad” as they tell us how we connect on a down-to-earth, people-to-people basis in our daily lives. Dr. Bill Schafer names these the “Earth Triad,” as these types govern our society’s basic existence by forming hands-on attachments in the world. Type 3s seek a practical and sustaining, ambitious and productive role in the world. Enneagram 6s seek to assure a safe and secure, predictable and certain existence in order to survive in the world. And 9s seek a comfortable (undisturbed) and harmonious, do no harm, get-along and go-along place in the world. Enneagram 3s have “lost” or gone away from the higher quality of hope, of knowing that just being in the world is enough to manifest and succeed in the material day-to-day world. Sixes (6s) have “lost” or gone away from the higher quality of faith, of knowing that the quality of pure being can manifest enough security and safety in the practical, often hazardous, day-to-day world. And 9s have “lost” or gone away from the higher quality of unconditional love, from the “I matter too” love of self, which is equal to the love 9s readily offer others. The path for those of us with one of these three types is to release from the other-referencing and clinging to reassuring worldly attachments as the way of being in the world. Allow in emotional discomfort (that challenges our relied-upon routines), locate one’s own self-directed agency, and ultimately, learn to allow and then integrate our higher qualities of being into our day-to-day material-world focuses of attention.

The Pragmatists - Types 3, 6 and 9: Issues around how we relate to the world through our roles: Threes seek a practical and sustaining role in the world, Sixes seek a safe and secure existence in the world, and Nines seek a comfortable position or place in the world.

People with the attachment object relation tend to have a sense of contentment that their needs (with people, situation, things) are being met. Their sense of self is based on being deeply attached to things perceived as good. To attach themselves, these types adapt their ways to be consistent with important people or things.

Attachment in Threes

Threes adapt their self-image to be consistent with the expectations and values of others. Threes are aware of what is valued by their friends, family, coworkers, etc. and they strive to attain those values. That way, they can receive the attention and validation from others. Their sense of self is based on an attachment to their self-image as a successful, valuable person.

Attachment in Sixes

Sixes adapt their belief systems to be consistent with those of an authority figure or system. Sixes doubt their own ability to cope with the world, so they seek security through another person or system. Their sense of self is based on an attachment or association and loyalty to important people or groups.

Attachment in Nines

Nines adapt (or accommodate) their own wants and opinions to be consistent with those of others. Nines want peace, so why rock the boat? By going along with others, they can attain the harmony they seek. Nines base their sense of self on their attachment to their idealized (internalized harmonious) view of the world.

Multiplicity - Types 3, 6, 9

The final group in the object-relation theory is the attachment-based group. The types within this group are attached to a state of being, an image, a job, a feeling, whatever it is that's stabilizing their lifestyle. These attachments can often be too deeply held and can cause problems for the types. I've also noticed there is an inherent multiplicity present within these types, a sort of chameleon-ness. Type 3 has the obvious shifting of image present. They are able to quickly shape-shift the presentation of themselves to others in order to be appealing to others and present their success. Type 9 contains multiplicity in being, changing with their environment. This type is most affected by the space it enters, filling their consciousness to merge with certain people or specific environments. Interestingly, Type 6 shows the multiplicity within personality. This is the only enneagram type that has correlations with almost every single Myers-Briggs Type Indicator. Some have even alluded to the fact that within themselves there are splits within consciousness, forming an inner council of personality. Type 6 therefore alters personality to fit to that which provides the greatest security and personal safety to themselves. 369s are the most versatile and shapeshifting archetype there is. They know how to mold themselves to the current situation and absorb its core energy as if they become their environment at the cost of their identity. Their main strength is their porousness and their biggest weakness is their spinelessness;

Attachment (3, 6, 9)

- Tend to perceive/expect their needs being met by others
- Was impacted by their perceived dependency on their caregiver(s)
- Likely to actively ignore or reframe the lack of met needs (self-gaslighting)
- Tend to be rather stability and comfort-seeking
- Change occurs so long as it ensures a greater chance of feeling of stability
- Unsure about themselves in the area of attachment, as they were so reliant on figure(s)

Attachment Triad

The Attachment Triad shows the other side of the scope from the Frustration Triad--where the Frustration Triad maintains a sense of self and a sense of what they needed. The Attachment Triad Types believe that any amount of unmet need of feeling seen or supported is a direct result of something wrong with themselves. Attachment Types respond to this belief by changing themselves to elicit the response they wanted from the Nurturer or Protector, resulting in skewed senses of self, and personal desires. Each modification these Types make to remain attached to these first relationships results in ultimately losing themselves and a sense of what they really want.

Type Three

Type Threes felt unseen by the Nurturing figure and as a result changed themselves in order to be “seen” better by the Nurturer. Played-over a lifetime, Threes will lose touch with their true selves, their true interests, and true personalities and morph to whatever image the Nurturer deems as successful. This extreme desire to be seen, known, and connected to others will result in them not knowing themselves.

Type Six

Type Sixes did not feel the support they needed to differentiate and pursue their own interests by the Protector figure, and so modified their pursuits to fields that were supported in order to maintain the connection they desired. This changing of what the Six pursues will ultimately result in them pursuing goals, careers, and relationships that stay in the realm of support without any real interest in them. They will frequently complain that they do not know what to do, when what they really mean is that they don't know what to do to maintain the support they need.

Type Nine

Type Nines felt both unseen and unsupported by these important figures in their lives. As a means of maintaining connection to these relationships, Nines will merge with others preferences, agendas, and avoid all conflict. This constant changing of the self for the sake of maintaining connection leads to the Nine forgetting themselves and their interests entirely and living in a fog to their desires.

Attachment: The core Types—Three, Six, and Nine—are members of the attachment group. People with these personality types get into trouble by attaching to something that, ultimately, limits their life experience. Threes attach to external validation from others, causing them to strive for success and make sure they get noticed.

Sixes attach to the external support of individuals or groups to feel safe and allay their fears – remember that Sixes are part of the Fear triad. Nines attach to an inner sanctum where everything is as it should be (to them): peaceful and comfortable.

378 – The Mover & Shaker Archetype

378/387: Innovative and direct 3. This is the most expeditious and assertive 3. An accomplished, dynamic go-getter, this 3 is jolly, with big energy. A true mover and shaker, this 3 is the super-achiever and can be mistaken for an 8 or 7. The core fears are of failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

738/783: Direct and focused 7. This is the most assertive 7. Highly creative and positive, these 7s are true movers and shakers and rainbow makers. This is the professional 7 that can be mistaken for a 3 or 8. This 7 is very industrious and always on the go. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, failure, being incapable, unable to do, inefficient, second best, and unmasked.

837/873: Focused and innovative 8. This is the most assertive and energetic 8. A true empire builder, this is the true mover and shaker 8, especially if extraverted and/or a self-preserving subtype. This 8 is most likely to be the entrepreneur. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

Gut: 8 Heart: 3 Head: 7

Controlling their Environment

- 378s try to maintain a certain control over their environment, even though they want to keep a positive façade and be unaffected by it;

Impatience and Anger

- 378s are really impatient and won't let people limit their capacity to enjoy creating and making things happen;

Asserting their Will

- 378s are like conquerors of foreign land; they test and try new things to further expand their territory and make new gains;

Competitiveness

- 378s see competition as a game to be enjoyed to the fullest while coming out on top as the ultimate goal. While they take challenges seriously like the other THREE and EIGHT combinations, they can usually use charm and humor in order to meet their goals;

Focus of Attention

- 378s concentrate on expanding their sphere of influence on the real world. They only fight if they are being confronted or slowed down, but prefer to keep on a cool head;

Protectiveness

- 378s are less openly protective of their people while being more concerned with personal gains. They will not back down if people they love are in danger, but they will try to negotiate and make light of the situation if said event isn't too threatening;

Relationships

- 378s are more utilitarian and business-like with their relationships. They usually prefer to keep emotional entanglements for others;

Main Assets

- 378s' biggest asset is that they can be superb at seizing opportunities that can nab them the best outcome of all;

Role in society

- 378s want to fill up a role, often socially enviable, and be recognized for it;

Potential Problems

- 378s can be seen as insensitive and provocative to others because they tend to love a good conflict in order to stir up some drama. They are quick-witted, but can eventually lose appeal because of their jerk attitude. Also, they can be so egocentric that they forget to include other people in their goals and schemes. Like the 368s, they can be very adept at putting their foot in their mouth and say or do something offensive or inappropriate. Their “deal with it” attitude can seem old very fast and look distasteful. Finally, they need to look inside themselves more and listen to their inner motivations, as they spend way too much time outside their own mind and heart;

Patterns & Structure

- 378s are triple assertive and expansive. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to conquer and expand their physical territory in order to create what they crave and envision. They are the empire builders, always on the lookout for new ways of spreading their way of thinking and act immediately upon creating new schemes.

Paired with a self-preservation instinct, this tritype is more grounded and looks for the right deal to make a profitable experience. They are very epicurean and like to keep an image of a laid-back, positive person.

With the sexual subtype, the attention is less tangible and more focused on reaching lofty ideals. New experiences need to be felt and savored more intensely than the self-preservation subtype. They like to be seen as an ideal, perfected person to a few people close to them, and their intent is to consume experiences, not just living them.

Social variant is more involved with securing a political or organizational enviable place in the established hierarchy. They are the most comfortable with the spotlight and like to maintain a grandiose, greater than nature persona when appearing publicly. Those are usually quite colorful, but not as much as the sexual variant;

The 837 is the slick, expansive, powerhouse, 'can do' person that sees the big picture but avoids feelings, seeing them as speed bumps that get in the way of manifesting and making things happen.

Interests:

- want to be in control
- thinking rather than feeling
- achieving success

Mission:

- exploring possibilities and trying things to achieve your goals

Blind spots:

- not think about why what you're doing is valuable and why you want to do what you're doing
- ignoring emotions

Fears:

- being alone
- appearing vulnerable

If you are a 378, you are ambitious, innovative, and protective. You want to be efficient, happy, and straightforward. You are a dynamic go-getter, focused on the prize. An expansive powerhouse, you see the big picture and have the will to make it happen. You are a true entrepreneur and empire builder. Seeking success, obstacles are seen as competitive challenges. You are able to achieve whatever vision you have due to your “can do” personality.

Your life mission is to see what is possible and find innovative ways to achieve your goals. A true mover and shaker, you are happiest when you are in a position of power to manifest your vision and make things happen. You need to be doing to feel alive. You can be so expeditious, assertive and results oriented that you miss your impact on others and the deeper meaning and significance of why you are doing what you are doing. Most assertive tritype. This type is very outward focused. They must keep themselves involved with the external world in order to be relieved of stress and tension. Being alone and inactive causes anxiety. With the Mover Shaker, the focus moves to the heat and the creative, vision, future ideal, what is possible, and entertaining ways to succeed in a big way. They imagine, produce, and manifest.

Most assertive tritype-378, 873, 783

This is the most go-getter tritype; someone who understands social dynamics and how to adjust themselves to succeed while enjoying obstacles and challenges.

387...assertives

You have all three Expansive Solution Enneacards (3, 7, & 8)

Naturally forward and expansive, you see yourself as assertive, self-motivated, expeditious, and results oriented. Focused on action, you resist being controlled and letting your feelings get in the way of achieving your goals. When opposed, you react immediately and when necessary are not afraid to move against others to manage problems.

The sexual 378 is triple assertive and has the added jolt of the high intensity sexual energy. 378 is self-assured, innovative, and bold. There will be more of a focus on being strong and attractive compared to other instincts. The 379 is a bit softer and more adept at softening their presentation. We always refer to the 379 as the “cool guy” or “cool girl” tritype as they want to be trendy and cool but also blend. The 378 may be more outlandish, so pays less attention to being cool and more attention to being the trailblazer.

Well if you lead with the 7 instead of 3 you will be less concerned with image and be less likely to track what others want you to be as the 7 is more concerned with following their own muse. However, with the sexual subtype in charge, both the 378 and the 738 will want to be alluring to potential intimates and mates and have a desire to find a mate who can handle their triple assertive energy.

A 379 would be a more reflective and considerate but also more indecisive and chameleon-like (and somewhat more withdrawn, at times) version of a 378.

And 379/793 would differ from the 378 in that 379 would be more diplomatic and conflict-avoidant than the 378.

3-7-8: The Extrovert

Hurley and Dobson elaborate that the aggressive types (3-7-8) have repressed their emotional center and are little focused on others, and thus can be defined as seeking expansive solutions and being Horney's aggressive type.

Eight with a three fix: the notably success oriented, prominence seeking eight. Utilizes image and manipulation to advance their career or enterprise. Business achievement can lead to political aspirations.

87?: Focused, intuitive, and innovative. Most assertive and nonconforming 8. Moody, intense, eccentric, entrepreneurial 8 especially if sx.

The healthy ones are sociable, motivated, funny, helpful, responsible, and entertaining individuals. The unhealthy ones, however, are hedonistic, insecure, manipulative, power hungry, egotistical bullies with fragile ego and no regard for others. You always gotta tend to their ego, and they care waaay too much about their social status. They think they're special and has some kind of god complex surrounding their energy, which makes them judgmental people who like to look down on others. How do I know this? Because I grew up with one. 🐼🐼

The 378 tritype is exactly the kind of person a successful venture needs. While this type is often very goal oriented with a particularly strong ability to notice what is not working and needs to be changed. The 378 enjoys such obstacles and sees them as a welcome challenge to be overcome. With all three cores seeking comfort outside the person, it is typically their inner goals that go ignored. 3 looks to the world for direction and feedback and is constantly adjusting in order to succeed. 7 looks to the world for excitement and novelty to resist the anxieties of life. 8 looks to the world to guard against anything that would seek to control. With such a focus on achieving their goals in a new and exciting way, the 378 can sometimes ignore the impact of their intensity on others and may even overlook the importance of looking inside themselves to understand their own motives.

387 & 837 are both Movers and Shakers. They both want to win and have power, but in a different way. The 387 is focused on achieving success; especially success in the eyes of others. The attention goes to identifying the role needed to make the achievements that are viewed as successful. With success comes power. The 837 is more focused on overcoming obstacles and succeeding in spite of the obstacles...they never give up. The 837 is less focused on the role and more focused on the position of power. With power comes success. The 837 wants to be seen as successful but wants autonomy more and are not dependent on other's view of them.

With the 738 the focus moves to the heart and the creative, vision, future ideal, what is possible, and entertaining ways to succeed in a big way. They imagine, produce, and manifest.

378- Direct in addressing. Seems to have a "wild" side yet has careful maintenance so that it always portrays them in the best light possible. Could be seen as flighty. Blunt but positive about it. Bold. Decisive. Appears very extroverted. Playful side, but take charge as well. Not likely to ruminate on feelings, will do things in the here and now. Wants to be recognized for their spontaneous go getter ambitious side, I will achieve what I decide to. Charming in a blinding impacting way, whirlwind.

Most likely tritype to become a millionaire. They're the type of people to be working 70 hours a week at the age of 80. Has the mindset of "Work hard, play hard, look good. 💎"

I will never get over how much these people are demonized and/or idealized on the internet. Most of you don't understand that we're normal people, not sociopaths. The reality is that we're just people who can get so energized that they bounce off the walls and can't stop talking. It feels like running on energy drinks without ever consuming them. Also, only unhealthy and bad mood 837s could be terrifying, but other than that we're just really passionate people who want to be on the top of our interests. Sometimes it can seem childish because we can get impatient if we're not good at something instantly.

It has long been thought that the 378 is the most assertive Tritype because the 3, 7, and 8 are the assertive type in the triad in which they reside. The 3 is the assertive heart type, the 7 is the assertive head type and the 8 is the assertive gut type. And to a large degree this is true... however...the 368 is actually more aggressive than the 378, but why?

This is a great question because both of these Tritypes are assertive. In general terms, the definition of aggressive is usually equated with being combative, angry, and quarrelsome whereas assertive is often defined as being bold or confident in behavior, manner, or style.

Both definitions fit aspects of both Tritypes. Both the 378 and the 368 are assertive and/or aggressive, but in different ways.

An important note is that any type can be aggressive, just as any type can be intelligent, sad, or lonely, etc. What we want to consider is why and how an emotion is overused and how it is used as a defense strategy.

I love my analogies... in large part because I have found that people learn faster when they understand the archetypal energies of Types, Tritypes, and Instinctual Types. If we compare and contrast the 'Gestalt' of the energies present, it is easier to see the nuances of type.

In general terms...

The 378s are the politicians, whereas the 368s are those in the Special Forces.

The 378s are the bombers, whereas the 368s are the tanks and torpedoes.

The 378s are the lions, whereas the 368s are the honey badgers.

The 378 is a very dynamic combination of Enneagram Types. All 3 deny their emotions in favor of doing. (you don't say)

The 378s are confident go-getters that enjoy doing big things in a big way. The 3 loves the energy that comes from setting and achieving a goal, the 7 loves the energy that comes from what is new and exciting, and the 8 loves the energy that comes from personal empowerment and overcoming obstacles.

The 3 and 7 are both very positive. The 3 will fake it until they make it, and the 7 will reframe a negative past or present with a more positive future.

And, the 3 and 8 are both highly competitive and want to win... The 3 wants to be seen as the best and a winner, and the 8 wants to have the power to prevail against all odds.

The 7 and 8 are both very independent and creative types that follow their own drum. Both do not want limitations. The 7 wants to be the leader of their group to ensure freedom from boredom, and the 8s want to be master and commander of their own life rather than conforming to the limitations of 'group think'. (sounds like cp 6)

Special note:

So, when these types are combined, they have a shared world-view that is focused on being independent, positive, innovative, creative and results-oriented, winners. As such, they are ideally suited to be leaders and are the rainmakers and the captains of industry...

The 7 in the 378 Tritype brings more autonomy, vision, and a lighter touch than we will see in the 368. The focused intensity of the cp6 in the 368 Tritype has a militant type of intensity. So, the 378s by comparison are more political, and as such, are natural leaders and innovators whereas the 368s are more loyal and dutiful and as such are better enforcers of justice.

The Assertive Group (sometimes referred to as the Aggressive Group) consists of enneagram types 3, 7, and 8.

Each of these types are aggressive in their own ways, but they all move against people in hopes of earning what they desire (attention for 3s, security for 7s, or autonomy for 8s)

Pros of the Assertive Group: they are independent, energetic, and assertive.

Cons of the Assertive Group: they may be demanding and sometimes have a hard time following through on projects.

Type 3s in the Assertive Group

Enneagram type 3s move against people by being aggressive in their goals in hopes of earning attention.

Type 7s in the Assertive Group

Enneagram type 7s move against people by being aggressive in satisfying their desires in hopes of earning security.

Type 8s in the Assertive Group

Enneagram type 8s move against people by being aggressive in asserting themselves against others in hopes of earning autonomy.

Advice for the Assertive Group

Be aware that as an assertive type, you tend to default to your intensity in order to feel that you are alright. This is because assertive types are “unproductive” in their feeling. Try to be aware of how you really feel and how others may feel before instinctually demanding what you think you need.

This one is for all you 3’s, 7’s, and 8’s out there. Assertive types (sometimes called “aggressive”) are known for going after what they want. Instead of withdrawing or complying with the people around them, they move against others in order to achieve their needs and wants (like control, acceptance, or safety). These are the people who take charge, take action, and DEMAND results. They are frequently recognized for their independence, ambition, and outward confidence. For anyone interested in Freud, these are the types that are centered on their own ego.

Even though 3’s, 7’s, and 8’s have this common assertive thread, the way they assert themselves shows up differently.

For 8’s, their primary drive is control. When they assert themselves to gain control, it can come across as confrontational and sometimes downright aggressive. They don’t shy away from challenging authority and will do what it takes to be in control of their situation.

On the other hand, 7’s are looking for security and support rather than control. They are always looking for a good time and often feel it’s owed to them. If they don’t find what they’re looking for, they'll assert themselves and demand that something changes, or they'll leave and make their own fun somewhere else.

Both 7's and 8's tend to enter a room and expect to be the center of attention, and don't mind having that attention.

Enneagram 3's are slightly different. They still have the assertive/aggressive nature and go after what they want, but they rely on the opinions and acceptance of the group much more than 7's and 8's. In order to achieve their deepest desire (identity/acceptance), they assert themselves in hopes of making other people like and accept them. If they aren't accepted, they change themselves in order to fit the mold and be liked.

This triad is seen as the 'moving against' stance. These types are very much focused on acting in a manner to gain what they desire. They are the types that think about what they want and then act to gain this. It's this focus on the self that matches the Freudian association of the ego. To assert oneself is second nature.

This is very obvious with type 8 as they assert themselves very often, sometimes to the point of aggression. For Type 7, the assertion is seen when they pursue new things, asserting their right to fun. Type 3 asserts itself in a more subtle sense, focusing more on their own goals. However, if one was to stand between them and these goals, they would stand up for themselves.

The general advice for the Assertive Stance types is to be aware of the other people. The types can often act without thinking about how their actions are affecting people, sometimes with very negative consequences. It is the simple notion of thinking before acting, but also thinking about others before doing. It's also interesting to note these types can sometimes have difficulty forming deep, meaningful relationships with people.

Aggressive Type:

These type of people like thinking and doing more than feeling. They go ahead with their plans without giving a second thought to feelings—their own feelings and those of others.

Type 7 is in the thinking center, and they love to make plans and go ahead with action in order to bypass their own pains. This is where their aggression comes from.

Type 8 is in the doing center, and as their center suggests, they are into action and just use thinking as a prop. They are looking to achieve great things in the world as a result of their actions.

Type 3, in the heart center, have no contact at all with their feelings and can put feelings aside in the pursuit of their plans.

The assertives (Horney's "moving against people") include the Threes, Sevens, and Eights. The assertive types are ego-oriented and ego-expansive. They respond to stress or difficulty by building up, reinforcing, or inflating their ego. They expand their ego in the face of difficulty rather than back down, withdraw, or seek protection from others. All three of these types have issues with processing their feelings.

Each of the Hornebian Groups has an intrinsic sense of self in relation to other people. Recognizing and understanding the untruth of this “sense of self” can be extremely valuable for seeing through some major features of our ego. A simple example will make this clear: if you were to walk into a room full of people, you would automatically experience yourself in a certain way. If you are in the assertive group, your first automatic response would be, “I am the center. I am what is important here. Now that I am here, something is going to happen.” Assertives automatically feel that everything meaningful happening is in relation to them.

Sevens and Eights naturally feel this way. Sevens come into a room and subconsciously think, “Here I am, everybody! Things are going to be more lively now!” Eights subconsciously think, “Okay, I’m here. Deal with me.” These types “take over” the space and expect others to react to them. Threes, however, do not easily or naturally feel like the center because, as we have seen, they are covertly dependent on the attention of others to feel valuable. As much as possible, Threes will find subtle ways to get positive regard from others, so they will feel like the center, as if to say, “Look at what I have achieved. Look at me and affirm my value.”

People whose dominant Social Style is the assertive style are independent, extroverted, and energetic. They are party people who take charge and want to make things happen. They get involved in their environment, meeting life head on, unwilling to withdraw from it. These people know what they want and go directly after it. They have a sense of importance and feel that they are central to the important things in their world. When they are stressed, they reinforce their self-importance and push back against obstacles.

These people often see opportunities and try to take advantage of them. They are great for initiating projects, but sometimes have a hard time seeing them through.

These people are out of touch with their own heart. The heart creates an emotional connection with ourselves and with others. It helps us love and appreciate the value of ourselves and others. To compensate this imbalance, these people seek intensity and stimulation (e.g., adventure and risks)

These people insist and demand that their needs (see the Centers) are met.

The Assertive Style of Threes

Threes want attention, and they demand that others give it. Threes feel important and expect others to praise them. When that doesn't work, Threes will determine the values of their “audience” and adapt themselves to be more favorable to others.

The Assertive Style of Sevens

Sevens want security and fulfillment, and they demand that others and the world provide it. Sevens feel that they deserve to have fun and entertainment and if they don't get it here, they will seek it elsewhere. When others don't provide satisfaction, Sevens will seek it elsewhere or will try to indulge themselves.

The Assertive Style of Eights

Eights want autonomy and demand that they get it. An Eight will push others out of the way so he can do things his way. Eights want to be in charge and in control of their environment. If they lose that control, they will push back, become confrontational, or contest those who are in charge.

Assertive - 378

Moving against others, focus on what the self needs/wants, “demand” needs

3: Goal-oriented, productive, action-based

7: Asserting their right to have fun, entitled to take what they want

8: Power and strong boundary, untethered anger

Types 3, 7, & 8 are in the Assertive group, and they insist by moving against people to get what they desire.

379 – The Ambassador Archetype

379/397: Innovative and accepting 3. This is the most positive, enthusiastic and happy 3. Outgoing, even if introverted. This is the salesman with the gentle touch. This 3 can be mistaken for a 7. The core fears are of failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

739/793: Accepting and focused 7. This 7 is the upbeat and gentle achiever that can appear 3ish, especially if a social subtype. Mellow, this 7 avoids confrontation as long as goals are met, and success is achieved. Overly positive, this 7 avoids negativity. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, and being unmasked.

937/937: Focused and innovative 9. This is the most professional and outgoing 9 that is often mistaken for a 3 or 7. This 9 is usually extraverted and overtly seeks friendships. This is the friendly, accomplished 9 that is upbeat and positive. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, failure, being incapable or unable to, inefficient, second best, unmasked, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

Gut: 9 Heart: 3 Head: 7

Controlling their Environment

- 379s shape-shift into what's more desirable and attractive to look at in their environment, so they don't use forceful tactics in the open;

Impatience and Anger

- 379s will try to divert their attention to more pleasurable experiences instead of pushing people or events to their breaking point;

Asserting their Will

- 379s are more comfortable maintaining peace and harmony in their environment and avoiding making controversies;

Energy Levels

- 379s are the most outgoing. They like to display what they can do in a fun and non-threatening way;

Role Fits

- 379s are very good in public relations and in the entertainment business. They like to keep spirits up and know how to read the situation;

Information Gathering

- 379s use their pattern-forming mind, anticipation, and excitement in order to better conform into a designated role or do a specific task;

Positivity Levels

- 379s are even more positive than 279 because of the need for maintaining their positive and can-do persona at all costs;

Communication skills

- 379s are more like spin-doctors and are the best to reframe and make it look like a situation or a project is better than it actually is;

Dealing with Own Emotions

- 379s, like all THREES, ignore their core emotions to better meet the current situation at hand. They do this by keeping an image of upmost positivity and charm;

Potential Problems

- 379s often gloss over important details that might undermine the super upbeat and neat image that they've created. This behavior might lead them in hot water, as people might realize the scheme behind all that positive front and start to view 379s as frauds and liars. It is only eased out when this tritype starts to connect with his or her identity that they learn to understand that honesty is a vital piece to any communication;

Patterns & Structure

- 379s are triple Optimistic and politically-savvy. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that pushes for a nice and enthusiastic outlook no matter the situation and adapt accordingly. They want to project a very attractive image in order to be liked and appreciated for its ideas, even though they have to bend the reality of the situation to better match their goals.

Self-preservation dominant with this archetype are very cunning at finding the best deal with the least amount of efforts and know how to put people at ease. They are also very modest and good at looking trustworthy.

Social subtypes are similar in behavior, but are much more about image and recognition than self-pres. They are very good at keeping a positive and easy-going front in order to make people believe that they are doing their best.

Sexual subtypes are more personable and use their tremendous charisma in order to entice people that they have worth. They can look like 279s in that regard;

Interests:

- sees the good in others
- creating peace
- achieving goals

Mission:

- finding ways forward and achieve positive change

Blind spot:

– overly focused on optimism, while it might actually be helpful to focus on negative emotions and possible pitfalls. Might even lead to fights

Fears:

- negative emotions
- conflict

If you are a 379, you are ambitious, innovative, and accepting. You want to be focused, upbeat, and peaceful. You like people and are outgoing, even if you are shy. You're easygoing and seek comfort, but strive for success and a feeling of personal importance. Furthermore, you're identified with what you do and achieve but are diplomatic, friendly, and kind in your approach. You have great ambitions, but approach them in an understated manner.

Your life mission is to find compassionate and effective ways to create change and bridge differences. A true ambassador of good will, you are happiest when you can help others become harmonious, build rapport, and develop their potential.

Your blind spot is that you can be so focused on what is positive that you can miss the wisdom that comes from experiencing and understanding negative emotions and end up creating conflict by avoiding it. Your growing edge is to recognize that your need to keep the peace at all costs and be what others want you to be to feel successful keeps you from knowing yourself. True self-awareness comes from listening to your higher self and being fully present in the moment. This is the positive motivator, someone who wants to administer positive, practical solutions to help others to reach their goals. The Ambassador archetype. This is the person that needs to be on the go and helping others to find common ground while still reaching their personal goals and staying busy.

379: Pleasant, takes things lightly. Considerate. Easy going. Comforting, soft, but there's still a high emphasis on achievements. Avoids stirring up drama and instead constantly looks at the positives, sometimes going out of their way to avoid acknowledging the negatives. People person, even though they can seem pretty quiet. Thoughtful, watches from behind the scenes and in this way, learns how to gain recognition as well.

The 379 Tritype® needs to be an exemplar of what is positive. They are like a handful of colorful balloons. They also love images of rainbows and balloons, regardless of which type leads.

The 379 Tritype® feels the need to be motivated, positive, efficient, and successful. They are known as the quietly ambitious, successful, fun-loving ambassadors of goodwill. They are the achievers with the soft touch that care about others.

Unconsciously, they feel it is their responsibility to look, feel, and act like the 'ideal' exemplar of the multi-faceted all-around good person that's smart, kind, successful, and likable. Not only do they need to meet that ideal for themselves, but they also need to help others do the same.

This creates a great deal of pressure. So, the 379 Tritype® struggles when they have a disappointing experience, don't achieve a goal, miss an opportunity and/or have an off moment with others. They feel anxious stress that they suppress. They are quick to deny painful emotions in favor of pseudo-happiness, and instead turn lemons into lemonade more than any other Tritype®.

So, when a painful experience is acute and needs time to heal, the 379 Tritype® can become impatient and be very hard on themselves for being down. Like the balloons, their happiness becomes deflated. When those with the 379 Tritype® feel this despair, they also feel a sense of inner emptiness that they feel they must hide from others. This is because their defense strategy believes that everyone loves a winner, not a loser (3), someone that brings people up and not down (7), and someone that is content, not complaining (9). When this happens, the 379 Tritype® can seem to be bouncing all over the place and overly positive. If a situation turns sour or is less than positive, this Tritype® can choose to ignore the change in energy and insist that everything is still great and that all things are possible. The 379 Tritype® is attempting to have a positive view to manage very real sadness and disappointment that their ideal expectations are only moments that are inconsistent and are fleeting at best. So, they pretend.

When in pain, the 379 Tritype® can come across as shallow due to their efforts to be positive when they feel negative. Done to excess, they can feel like empty calories to themselves and to others.

When they are down, their world becomes bleak and gray and devoid of color. It is an opportunity for introspection and growth, of course, but for this Tritype®, it is extremely difficult to do because it means embracing the bleak and the gray which their Tritype® is defended against. But, until they grieve whatever loss they are experiencing or have experienced in the past and let in the pain in small doses, their world will remain bleak with a broken façade.

Most pretend they are happy to remain likable and safe, but friends and loved ones read that something is amiss. This is when you can remind them that when they identify and name the pain (tag it), their world will become colorful again and that their ambitions and upbeat personality will return and feel real.

When working with the 379 Tritype®, it is really important to help them remember their amazing ability to see what is positive, possible, and harmonious in any given situation. Help them reconnect to themselves via their accomplishments. The disconnection happens when they feel that they are seen as less than the ideal exemplar of whatever image they have of themselves. Once they have found their center, you can begin the journey of working with them on the greater depth of emotions they need to cultivate and bring into awareness to more fully heal.

Help them begin to see that the fear of being uncool and un-fun or unsuccessful will actually begin to subside when they take steps to let what they avoid and are so good at concealing. It must be in tiny steps, though, as the defense strategy is wired to be a winner that has it all and will instantly deliver an artificial image to hide behind to feel safe when they are not positive. This is because they fear that if they're not upbeat, they will be overlooked and seen as unimportant and uncool.

The good news is that the 379 Tritype® will feel more positive, upbeat, and good-natured when they are connected to themselves. They act as if not to be insincere, but to hide their sadness when they feel down. They lose their motivation to do, be, and become. This is crushing because they want success and seek stardom, even when it is in understated ways. Help them to remember who they are, all of who they are, and what they have already accomplished that others haven't.

They love people and the energy that comes from being connected to others. They like color in every form. Likewise, they love projects and are very ambitious and can accomplish a great deal. But they need the affirmation that comes from others to, in turn, have the confidence they need to share their inspirations with everyone they meet. Like the flowers that turn to face the sun, 379s need to be inspired and be inspirational, and when they have it, they share their enthusiasm with the world.

A really sociable, charismatic, outgoing person. Extremely extroverted. This is the type of personality you'd see in an actor or a talk show host or something.

A 379 would be the most assertive 9 tritype! They'd be very outgoing and love the spotlight, yet avoid being too attention-seeking!

This tritype [927] is the most identified with seeing themselves as peaceful. More than any other tritype, they require peace and positive relating to experience a sense of being... so are extremely uncomfortable with negativity in relationships. The 479 doesn't like it, but expects it. It also brings the 937 tritype which is the true ambassador of goodwill.

The super positive types, 279 and 379, report that they try to get through grief as quickly as possible, especially if self-pres.

Yes, there is more than one positive Tritype. The super positive Tritypes are the 279 and the 379. The 279 is a Tritype that wants comfortable, easy relating. The 2 brings a greater emphasis on people. This is the 2ish caring, people oriented 7 or 9. The 379 is even more upbeat and positive. The 3 brings more of an emphasis on achievements. For example, this is the professional, 3ish 9 or 7.

All the 7+9 combinations are somewhat positive. The 279 is focused on being pleasant. The 379 the most positive. The 479 Is positive outwardly, but doesn't always feel it.

Calling all 379s. You all report the need to be upbeat, positive, and easygoing...but you want to make a difference and be a part of something meaningful. You are all embracing and look for the good in people and the gold and the end of the rainbow. You're good at mediating problems, but prefer to avoid negativity and negative situations. Most say that they see the glass half full. In your search for happiness, you can turn a blind eye to issues.

One Enneagram friend with the 379 Tritype said that she was a rainbow person. I liked this term, as all the 379s report that it feels uncomfortable to be negative. This is a Tritype that feels it is important to be upbeat. One 379 said bad feelings and negativity feel like acid rain. Another said she is solar-powered and needed the energy from the sun and positive encounters.

479 and 379 I have deemed the "cool guy" tritypes. When 4 is there, you get that sort of archetype of the cool artist, laid back, playful, witty, but with a sort of "hidden sorrow". You sense there is more there, but that they are keeping you at bay in order to avoid dipping too much into the swamp.

If you knew just how off-base the names 'Healer' and 'Gentle Spirit' are for the 9-4-7 tritype, and how slanted the name 'Ambassador' is for the 9-3-7 (or as you imply 9-4-7 with a very heavy Three wing), how pronounced the narcissism and exhibitionism of these two tritypes can be, you might not be so eager to identify with them. Also, the challenge to feel grounded in the physical world, or at least in one's own physicality, is part of the Nine itself, not to mention the Four.

The sexual 378 is triple assertive and has the added jolt of the high intensity sexual energy. 378 is self-assured, innovative, and bold. There will be more of a focus on being strong and attractive compared to other instincts. The 379 is a bit softer and more adept at softening their presentation. We always refer to the 379 as the “cool guy” or “cool girl” tritype as they want to be trendy and cool but also blend. The 378 may be more outlandish, so pays less attention to being cool and more attention to being the trailblazer.

Well if you lead with the 7 instead of 3 you will be less concerned with image and be less likely to track what others want you to be as the 7 is more concerned with following their own muse.

A 379 would be a more reflective and considerate but also more indecisive and chameleon-like (and somewhat more withdrawn, at times) version of a 378.

And 379/793 would differ from the 378 in that 379 would be more diplomatic and conflict-avoidant than the 378.

793: This is the positive motivator, someone who wants to administer positive, practical solutions to help others to reach their goals.

“The Ambassador” archetype. This is the person that needs to be on the go (3 and 7 coming together) and helping others to find common ground while still reaching their personal goals and staying busy.

More conflict avoidant, although with 7 in charge and an 8 wing there might be a tendency to be a bit more abrasive or shark-ish in their approach (particularly if self-preservation), but ultimately they will need to “get away from negativity”.

Comfort seeking, but needs measures of success and luxury.

I'm thinking conflicts will either be avoided entirely or dealt with very quietly and quickly, then brushed under the rug.

7-9-3 would be optimistic and omnivorous, with a strong aversion to conflict. Joie de Vivre, but without the drama. I can also see someone of this tritype being able to distract themselves from setbacks, or compartmentalize them. Harmony is important.

A 793/379 would share some similarities with 479, as far as bringing people together and being positive goes, but would have a more practical, action-oriented focus than the 479.

(3)-7-9 : The Positive 3
3-(7)-9 : The Normative 7
3-7-(9) : The Aggressive 9

This type is somewhat of a gung-ho optimist. They are great at getting along with people, and are often a lot of fun to be around. They're also a bit of a dreamer.

Negativity is horrid, I'd say my 3-7-9 combo has an optimistic view on self, ability, others' intentions, the future, and life in general. Even when I've been stupidly and majorly depressed, the sun was still shining out my sadness with optimistic rays! I cannot fathom people who like misery.

A bright, cheery, happy, friendly 739 is the epitome of a fair weather friend. As long as you're fun and happy, she's in. But god forbid you should want to discuss something painful or dark. Or NEED something.

973: In my theory, people with this tritype are like all human beings—contradictionary, but of course in a different way. In my theory, they tend to be drawn to people and are outgoing, but at the same time shy. They tend to be gentle and also one of the more positive and assertive kind of 9. The main things they strive for are success and building an identity around what they do and achieve. This 9 tends to be very focused on positivity, which is good, cause that brings assertiveness with it imo. Downside of that is that there is not much effort in understanding negative emotions and are also avoided and as a result of this, there could come conflicts with others.

7-3-9 (and to some extent 7-4-9) are the “cool guy” tritype, in that these people tend to have this air of being very cool about them, people seem to gravitate to them, as they tend to easily embody the archetype of being cool and metropolitan while still being laid back and “chill”.

458 – The Scholar Archetype

458/485: Knowledgeable and direct 4. This is the most analytical and tough-minded 4. This 4 tends to be intellectual with strong opinions. Wants to know what makes people tick. They will focus on gathering unique information to feel empowered. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, abandoned, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

548/584: Direct and intuitive 5. This is the most intense and eccentric 5. Scholarly, this is the 'Professor'. Can be melancholic one moment and then detached the next. This 5 is the emotional and creative 5. This is the most outspoken, opinionated and non-conforming 5. The core fears of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, being fully embodied, not existing, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace and being abandoned. The 845 is the somewhat introverted, intelligent, headstrong, detached, hyper introspective problem solver with strategic thinking and emotional astuteness.

845/854: Intuitive and knowledgeable 8. This is the most sensitive and withdrawn 8, especially if introverted, self-preserving and/or with the 9 wing. This 8 can be mistaken for a 5 or 4. This is the creative and intellectual 8 that is secretly shy and emotional. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

Gut: 8 Heart: 4 Head: 5

Relation to Anger

- 458s can become quite upfront and adamant about what they know. They usually don't shy away of debates and like to confront other's ideas;

Personal Strengths

- 458s are the best at developing personal views and theories, particularly philosophy and/or politics. They love to delve into specific topics and defend their ideas;

Control from the Environment

- 458s are extremely independent and don't like uncalled external help that can be interpreted as coercive and controlling;

Emotional Life

- 458s are very emotionally guarded and don't easily share their inner life with anybody. They feel things deeply and for a long time; They love to examine and analyze what they are feeling; Intellectual

Processes

- 458s gain intellectual and emotional security by understanding what makes people tick and how peoples' behavior affects each other in a deeper way; Once they settle on a definitive way of looking at things (theories, personal experience, etc.), they become adamant about it, and it's very difficult to change their mind;

Security

- 458s find security through gaining more insight through their intellectual researches. They try to understand how things work by creating thorough analyses and thus gain confidence by defending their point;

Relationships at Play

- 458s don't mesh well with people either, since they prefer to keep a low profile and focus their attention on their emotional and intellectual experience;

Social Masks

- 458s often remove themselves from the crowd and act as unapproachable because they fear being influenced by common people. They keep their high sensitivity in check when escaping their lair;

Fields of Interest

- 458s are more interested in philosophy, esoteric or hermetic theory and art. They often understand well symbols and have natural intuition to uncover the many mysteries of life;

Potential Problems

- 458s may run the risk of being too closed-minded and argumentative about what they know to be the truth. Since they look at things very thoroughly, they can use their knowledge as a weapon, attacking any differing minds with it. Also, this tritype isn't the best communicator, in the sense that they can be curt and a bit rude about information that they perceive as superficial or incomplete. They also tend to keep their language peppered with complicated and/or posh terms that might confuse people. They may need to be more open-minded and understand that people don't understand things the same way as they do and often are satisfied with more simple answers;

Patterns & Structure

- 458s are triple independent thinker. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to come up with an idiosyncratic view or answer to look up information and learn about their environment and themselves. This means that they can be very selective about accepting information from an outside source, especially if they are knowledgeable in said subject.

When combining this tritype with the self-preservation instinct, this gives off a pretty introverted and solitary character. This combination is probably the most independent one of all, especially when leading with FIVE or EIGHT. They are very focused on survival and can be very wise about subjects such as existentialism or life and death in general.

Sexual subtypes are more passionate as always, but with this archetype, the accent is on sharing intimacy with one romantic partner. They can give everything and even sacrifice themselves for their partner in exchange for eternal faithfulness.

Social subtypes are somewhat at odds with this tritype. They like to be seen as the wise and resourceful person of the group and can even be the silent leader orchestrating everything in the background. They might not always feel up to the task, though, even if they can hide it well;

Interests:

- understanding others and the world
- finding solutions to problems

Mission:

- knowing how the world works and change it for the better

Blind spots:

- arrogance
- overly certain of their world views and their facts
- two faces

Fears:

- being incompetent
- being ignorant

If you are a 458, you are intuitive, knowledgeable, and protective. You want to be original, wise, and straightforward. You study what makes people tick and form strong opinions about what you learn. Somewhat introverted, you are identified with being an intuitive, strategic thinker. You see and focus on the interconnections that others often miss. You tend to be interested in the great works and ideals that stand the test of time.

They're the "true scholar" and the life mission is to disseminate what information is found. There will be a tendency to become fixed in their worldview or ideas, particularly about people, and not take in new information. So while the map that they've painted is quite extraordinary, they may miss a whole region and thus not have the full picture. This is also the most cynical, and the tendency to be so overly opinionated can make people turn off to their wisdom. An intensely original archetype with a passion to explore and to find the hidden meaning in all things.

Their gift is their ability to devise complex mental maps of what they've learned and understand things at a very high degree of complexity, thanks to their unprecedented intuition. Their blind spot, however, is that they can be overly fixated on their opinions and rebuke external argument if they deem it lacking in depth. They are argumentative and opinionated to a fault.

Firstly, none of those types seem very... empathetic. 5 is a hermit, 8 is too aggressive, and 4 is the heart type that cares the least about what other people think. Overall kind of a brick wall, it would be a good idea to be kinder, or at least more polite.

The quiet, secluded nature of Enneagram 5 coupled with the volatile traits of 8s and 4s makes this type seem quite edgy and misanthropic in a way as well. Consider being more polite and, well, normal.

All 3 types may also be a little arrogant, so work on that.

5 + 4 has the perceptiveness and thoroughness of the type 5 mixed with the intuitiveness and sensitivity of type 4. It pushes more to this subjective aspect of both types also having a bit of the emotionality and meaning seeking of type 4.

The Scholar is the somewhat introverted, intelligent, headstrong, detached, hyper introspective problem solver with strategic thinking and emotional astuteness. This is the most intense type. Intuitive, knowledgeable and direct. This is the type that really craves knowing what makes people tick and builds what she calls mental or internal maps that are quite astute as to what makes people do what they do. This tends to be the darkest of the tritypes because of the intensity of the 3 types (particularly if 4 or 5 is in charge).

Darkest tritype-458, 854, 584 (particularly when 4 or 5 are in charge)

Also, if you are still considering 548 (or 845): she said this is the most intense type, particularly if sexual.

David said there is a propensity toward the grotesque, anatomical, or intensely esoteric. The blind spot is this has 3 types that can be prone to arrogance and the attachment to the internal map of what they've found can make them blind to new information as it comes in. She said when 8 is in charge, there's a bit more compassion, and with an integrated 5 or 4 in charge you get a gifted spiritual teacher (Russ Hudson, for example)

Weird Ideas, Social Awkwardness, Anger Issues

874 and 854 are very similar and can be difficult to distinguish, as 8 has access to both 7 and 5. What is helpful is to look at the differences between 7 and 5. The most critical aspect is engagement. The 7 engages and brings a positive outlook to the 84_. The 5 is more internal and brings more introversion and reserve. The 874 is more outgoing and spontaneous. It is the difference between facts vs activities.

854 and 862 share the self-possessed confidence with solution mastery. The 854 is the artsy and intellectual 8—with a secret self-consciousness. The 862 is the champion rescuer, protector with a great need to help—more duty.

The 468 is a true challenger and truth teller. The 4 may be shy, but this Tritype is very intense and reactive—quick to speak their mind. The 485 is the true intellectual that has strong opinions about their feelings and thoughts, but less reactivity. Sexual instinct with 4 dominant makes both tritypes more intense. The 468, however, is more dutiful and feisty, whereas the 458 is one of the tritypes that lives in their head, researching and following their own muse.

846 vs 845. These two tritypes are very different. Both take charge and seek solutions. The 846 is one of the most confrontational tritypes. The other is the 836. The 6 amplifies the 8 need for loyalty and trust. The 845 is more introverted and introspective. The 854 has 5 as a line of connection as well as in the tritype and makes this 8 more scholarly and focused on depth.

(4)-5-8 : The Power-Seeking 4

4-(5)-8 : The Reactive 5

4-5-(8) : The Withdrawn 8

Impenetrable inner world. They are complex individuals, but they are more characterized by the way they tend to push everyone away from them.

The 584 Tritype® is more likely to just speak out about their views. They are very intellectual, philosophical, and passionate. They are also strong in their opinions due to the intensity of the 8 and the 4 in the 548 Tritype®.

5-8-4: Most Intense Five. Needs creativity. Can be moody and melancholy.

I am a 584 and, well, I am usually oscillating between being detached, as a 5, and rage episodes, when in distress, as having strong 8 traits. Having 8 also results in me being very intense in arguments and choosing to debate more often than 5s generally would. That is, I do not shy away from being seen as argumentative while trying to prove my point. 4 makes me quite unstable, and dwelling in the realm of feelings more than a 5 typically does. I will not show externally anything, but inside I can have quite a chaotic whirl of feelings.

458 – Strong opinions. A blunt type, doubled by the 5's somewhat impartial observational nature and the 8's confrontational one. This 4 can come off "headstrong." Intense combo, especially if sx is the primary instinct. May be arrogant in their convictions and closed to suggestions, "I've thought about this longer than you and even if you could have a point, I still thought about it longer, and I'm absolutely not going to take the opinion of someone who didn't ruminate on it as long or longer than me! I stand my ground!" Though, they can also be quite intelligent and able to lead when necessary because, while arrogant, they can sometimes come to reasonable conclusions.

Somewhat dark, prone to emotional turbulence and disturbance. Rich fantasy life. Sometimes may become annoyed with how "inactive" someone seems to be in their situation while they themselves, due to 5 and 4 are quite withdrawn and ruminate rather than act to solve a problem in a hypocrisy that flies over their head. Though spotting ways to solve someone else's problems can be easy for them, and they give fairly sound advice. Can be somewhat misanthropic or bitter, but to them, they're being realistic. Desires to be understood, but withdraws from attempts to understand.

This subtype tends to be more withdrawn and analytical, with an affinity for individualism. They are prone to strong emotions and sudden changes of mood, mainly attributed to the 4's tendency to have a negative self-image and low self-esteem, coupled with the 8's fear of being controlled. Also, they like to spend their time taking in information and knowledge of the world around them, linked to the influence of the type 5, all in pursuit of developing an identity with what they understand and discover.

The 458 is an active archetype...just more withdrawn...not passive like the librarian... more like the expert as they gather knowledge but have a very definite point of view like the 478 and 468.

Five with an eight fix: least intellectual, though perhaps the most mentally intense. Unsettled by occasional fits of temper, sudden outbursts. Affixed to notions of power; attitude of resigned realist. Quietly guarded and insistent, may put others ill at ease.

Eight with a four fix: the moody, loner eight. Distinct outsider quality; as if on a highly personal mission. Tendency to feel exempt from conventional rules and circumstances.

The 458 is more openly emotional and expressive. The 548 is more mental and reserved...like the difference between 4 and 5. Both are intuitive thinkers and tend to be introverted. They are intellectuals that take action when they feel strongly about something. Others are always surprised when the 8 appears, as this tritype appears quiet.

A couple of distinctions...the 458 is more emotionally expressive than the 548. The content can be very different. The 458 is more inclined to talk about their feelings about a subject of interest, whereas the 548 will be more reserved and speak about interesting facts about a subject. The energy of the 458 is focused on the analysis of their feelings first, whereas the 548 is focused on the analysis of the information first.

Social instinct increases the need to have the critical information needed to be interesting to others—to be wise and in the know. Sp increases the focus on the basics... the resources one must expend to have the information. What will the cost be? All 6 variations of the 458 will avoid being ignorant and speak up for what they believe in. For example, in contrast, the sp548 will be far more reluctant to speak than the sx845, but both fear being inadequate, incompetent, and powerless.

The 4-5-8 is the most direct and blunt of all the tritypes, except perhaps 3-5-8

Seeing your place as in the shadows is exactly how the 458 describes themselves. The 458, 468, and 478 are all truth tellers in their own way. The 468 is the one that is hyper reactive and still seeks a fair authority. The 458 and 478 are their own authorities.

Think 'edgy movie director' or 'avant-garde alt-rocker'. With two reactive fixes and 5 as the most negative of the neutrals, there is going to be a strong negative coloration here, and not much of a filter

The 548 tritype is the 5 most likely to appear 4-ish.

I think that a 458 tritype could be mistyped as 5, but this is much less likely than a 548 being mistyped as a 4. It is the double reactivity and resultant emotional intensity/volatility of having 4 and 8 together that clashes with the 5, even when 5 is core.

Out of 458/459/451, I'd guess that both 459 and 451 would seem more 5-like (or, more accurately, be more likely to be mistyped as 5) than 458.

The 845 is more commonly associated with introverted intuition, with the attention going inward. It can be darker and is more cynical.

(EIDB 548 tritype discussion thread: The Enneagram Institute Discussion Board - 5 4 8 Tritype): Intense, especially with sx first. Independent, dark, cynical. Most eccentric, creative 5 that tends to swing between detachment and emotionality. Most 4ish 5, especially with four wing. Tough-minded, analytical 4 that is staunchly individualistic. Withdrawn, sensitive, creative 8. "Scholar" archetype if I remember correctly. Wants to know what makes people tick.

Actually, I think this 5 would be more fantasy oriented than information oriented. This would be the dreamy 5.

What I was criticizing was the implication that the unique view a 5-4-8 creates is a monolithic system which doesn't change or adjust due to presumably stasis or narcissism or an inability to take criticism. Dynamism, flux and big intellectual shifts are much more likely. While a 5-4-8 is likely to be an intellectual narcissist, I think any criticism that they are unable to change or adjust their view is the opposite of the case because there is an intense self-criticism as well. Change and flux are constant. First, because 5-4-8's are unlikely to think in systems (which you've now agreed with), and second, because of their sensitivity to inconsistency, constant self-criticism and tendency to change positions. I think there is an element of truth in the description, though, in that 5-4-8's can be willfully perverse and too arrogant to accept criticism from others. But they are likely to outwardly repudiate that criticism, and then later modify their views accordingly, rather than stubbornly retain their original position.

My experience of this type is of course my only experience of any kind, so it's going to be hard being 'objective', but here goes. I find it a complex, contradictory, and often perplexing type to be. The 3 numbers pull against each other, and there is no social element (3, 6, or 9) to smooth the way. This is exacerbated if you have SO as your last stacking. Although all generalizations are suspect (including this one), it is particularly hard to generalize this tritype. This tritype seems peculiarly subject to flux, and thus can vary greatly, or have many real selves.

However, dark, eccentric, creative, cynical, sensitive, and scholarly are not wide of the mark (although tend to create a caricature if taken too seriously). It's true that we tend to be intensely interested in the psychology of other people, if only because we are at an utter loss to figure out ourselves much of the time. In a way, we are natural scholars but too scholarly. Too polymath and restless for universities these days, which reward the careerist specialist.

5-4-8's are subject to rapid oscillations of emotion and thought, and are equally capable of preternatural strength and weakness of mind at any given moment. One minute an angel, the next a cruel tyrant. A lot of love and a lot of hate. Exquisitely sensitive, but all too capable of cruelty and callousness to others. One wants to know, in a totalizing and essential fashion, know poetically but know precisely as well, but never quite gets there.

We are paradox-mongers, live in metaphor, and are always trying to find new ways to say and see things (and hence are often pretentious)—i.e., iconoclasts—but can be as pedantic, systematic, and anally analytical as anyone—i.e., using our 5-ness to beat others at their own games when they have underestimated us as loose, kooky, or not with it.

5-4-8's have a predisposition to religion and philosophy, especially pessimistic and melancholic strains, but a commensurate disappointment with the lack of answers that satisfy us and a concomitant melancholy.

I would caution against such a romanticized view of this tritype as it may defeat the value of knowing one's type. I would disagree with a lot of the first things you said about this combination – “many real selves” and “subject to flux”. I find a kind of coherency in that here you've got two reactive types (4,8) two rejection (5,8) two withdrawn (4,5) and three very independent types, very resistant to anything that originates outside itself, and not particularly concerned with objectivity, consistency, or interested in being accessible in any way. The greatest fluctuation I feel is between feeling incredibly hard and strong to being very self-conscious and inept. Strong and vulnerable are my two modes, brought out when I feel I am unable to make that leap across the fragments of words and space between myself and someone I have an interest in.

I believe Nietzsche and Gurdjieff were of this tritype, though Gurdjieff may have had 7 instead of 5, but Katherine Fauvre very much agreed with me when I said there was something “Hermetic” about this tri-type. There is a kind of deconstruction of present systems and a reconstruction into something that subverts previously-held notions. I like to think of myself as an “ontological terrorist”. Nietzsche is a beautiful illustration of what I see as the gift of this tritype – of staring past the fragility in the conceptions humans, as living and rational beings, hope to cling to and look into something “under”, to poke around and reveal the beauty within it. Hades operates under a kind of 854 archetypal pattern. There’s the destructive power and energy to produce an impact of 8, along with the “ground-up” construction and innovation of 5 with the creativity and will to rebirth of 4. Of course, that’s only there in the best examples of this tritype, a call the rest of us can only hope to live up to.

There are of course coherent factors—otherwise there wouldn't be a category. However, I still feel that the concept of change over time is very important to 548. I guess this is what I mean by different selves—the many selves over one's life (which is also true of everyone). That is, think of Heraclitus's saw—you cannot step into the same river twice. Not just because the river has changed, but because you did—that minute to minute one's self is mutating, adapting, contradicting itself. This does not necessarily have to defeat the concept of a core coherent self, but certainly challenges it.

The main difference between 864 and 854 is their level of emotional expressiveness when confronted with external data that they feel is off-putting or falsified. 854 is darker and less assertive than 864. They are more comfortable behind-the-scenes and is the only EIGHT that can seem truly introverted at times. This tritype hides its emotionality behind a quietly arrogant streak and like to know what makes people tick and weak. They are superb at creating mental frameworks of what they've learned and making connections between notions. They are often street-smart rather than book-smart, but they do enjoy reading a lot. This is also the most stubborn and unwavering tritype when it comes to opinions, as they will only accept new information if said source is competent and deeply-researched enough for them. Overall, the key to understand which tritype fits best is to see which enneatype in one center is more present consistently throughout our life: is your desire to retreat into your mind and be unaffected by your environment (FIVE) stronger than your need to feel safe and certain of any situation you're in atm (SIX)? Do you seek validation from others and are secretly doubtful of yourself (SIX) more than you want to amass personal knowledge and feel safe by knowing a lot (FIVE)?

The trick differentiating 854 and 874 is their overall energy level and the way they handle anxiety. 854's 8/5 line is amplified, so they really rely on moving against and away from people when they want to something. They think strategically whenever they have to make a move into the world and are more energy-conscious, so they want to preserve their energy level. Another way to look at it is that 854 are more somber and darker in their thought-process, meaning that they focus on finding what is hidden from appearances and often taboo to divulge. They're driven to unearth the dire truths of life.

I disagree with your point that 548s are not particularly concerned with objectivity, consistency, or interested in being accessible in any way. While these three values are pretty hard to attain, and difficult to define, they are pretty important to me, at least sometimes—and especially in any discrete intellectual task I want to complete.

548 are more likely than 549s to be confrontational. Generally, they're kind of close-minded and use difficult forms of languages to explain certain topics other people may struggle to grasp, have stronger opinions they hold firmly onto, and can display protective behavior over things/people they value.

I think our tritype is especially gifted with calling its fundamental beliefs into constant question. You've got 4's emphasis on self-creation and thus change, the 5's emphasis on clear perception, innovation, curiosity, and the 8 that confronts and challenges. There is always a readiness to undermine ourselves with an aim at change, but shows us what crap each construct we hold at every stage of growth really is, and there is always the correct suspicion that whatever construct we hold in the present is simply a construction.

Pros: Whip smart, super abstract, reads people extremely well. Demonstrates great leadership qualities, and uses empathy when needed, even if they do struggle with expressing or acknowledging their own emotional needs. Good at navigating their environment. Creative, investigative lone wolf. Strange brand of loyalty. It is not the 6 kind of loyalty, they let very few people in, and if you are one of them... you are pretty much in for life.

Cons: Too reclusive and withdrawn. Touchy about criticism. Downs feelings as a smoothie after throwing them into a blender. Arrogant. Intellectual snobbery. Elitist. Very dark and twisted mind. Can turn to some very strange means of exploring their own dark side or that of life. Prone to depression/severe mood swings. If it is a 4w5, extreme cases carry a risk of suicide. These guys reject people without giving them a chance. They are so wary of opening up to people, they compartmentalize their social sets and are capable of being completely different individuals with each lot. They fear being exposed as stupid or incompetent. Good at reading people, but BAD at offering comfort to people. Bad at telling someone else when they need help because they detest appearing weak, or that it would create an obligation they might not be able to fulfill. As an artist or creator, can create some very disturbing, jarring content.

- independent
- self-confident
- quite cerebral

- loner, reclusive, very little need for socializing, easily drained
- very bad habit of escaping into daydreams
- prone to immoderation and self-indulgence
- desire for intensity, but in an understated way that doesn't attract attention (intense, not flashy)
- desire for power, not necessarily in an expansive way as in to dominate over others, but rather to ensure my own invulnerability and prevent being affected by others
- deep underlying craving for accomplishment, thrill and satisfaction, for decadent consumption of experiences, adrenaline, material things, food; constantly at odds with the instinct to retreat from the outside world into the comfort of my mind (the latter usually wins)
- aesthetics and having good taste are an innate inclination
- snobby intellectual side, clashes with resourceful side that doesn't tolerate useless theorizing, and cheats on exams
- innate lack of respect for authority (as in, it is a given that I am out of their scope of influence)
- irritable
- drawn to the metaphysical since early childhood, esoteric, respects intuition ...also, (can't stop talking about myself, sorry) this kind of ties in with the point about social situations. I don't EVER take charge in larger group settings, I rarely even raised my hand in class, which is partly why I was undecided about the 8-fix for so long. I just lacked the leader/expansive aspect. Later on, I realized it just manifests differently.
- I sometimes surprise myself by how quick I am to take the reins in a one-on-one situation, or within a smaller group.

My SO and I are both in that triad (I'm an 854, and she's a 548).

First, we brood. We like to sit and think. Usually about philosophy or something heavier. Second is that we are sort of drawn to the darker side of art. Whether it's darker, depressive music or art that centers around the macabre, we're into it. (Personally, we collect skulls and other dead things)

And last, we sort of like being alone. We love our own thoughts and company. Can be a bit arrogant. We don't care about the opinions of other people. If you have a worthy thought, we'll explore it. But the chances of us enjoying it or agreeing are small. So we naturally keep to ourselves. Add the brooding nature and seething intensity, and you have a pretty fucking dark feel going on.

We are the most intense tritype, and, despite appearances, the least avoidant one. We may avoid the outside world, but this is because we are so strongly in touch with the inner world that the external world is too distracting. We are the only tritype to embrace all 3 centres. All other tritypes avoid at least one centre, but not the 584.

Hm. I never thought of it like that/as being in some way “less avoidant”.

Because, does the internal world even “count”? I guess this is even more exacerbated for us INxx MBTI specimens (and there seem to be plenty on INxx 458s).

It's basically always just, “watch out you don't become an arrogant thick head as you rely almost entirely on purely internal guidance”, which, obviously, is something to watch out for/avoid, but, looking at it in terms of advantages could help to find ways to conquer problems, or think of what to do.

To be honest, I was always captivated and marvelled by the idea that all the other people all have their internal worlds that are just as complicated and intricate as mine, with special people, dreams, all those weird ideas etc., that each little window in a big apartment building contains such a complete world, an inner universe, with things the person may never have shared or been fully aware of, a dynamic spark of which it's uncertain whether it can be held by memory or technology. I'd never have been so bold as to dare think that I'm a particularly ‘cavernous’ individual, perhaps making more use of the space than some, I mean I was a teenager once, but...

I guess that without understanding what exactly the alternative is, it sounded just too sad or dangerously arrogant. Now I know that most other people are just... more ‘filled up’ by what they're doing at the moment. I once read this post on how to tell you're a MBTI sensor type—written by an actual sensor for a change—and he described something like, “If you do an activity like fishing, video games, work with your hands etc., do you completely concentrate on it or drift off with your thoughts?” and that guy was an introvert and a 9 so still not quite at the end of that sliding scale, I remember one post of this ESTP who talked of his “inner world” like it's a black box machine he sees only the output of, or a dusty attic he keeps some stuff in that could be useful later, and sometimes trips over its contents/ has to infer them from the outside. That sounds almost a bit alien, and yet, it's not even that non-standard in the endless kaleidoscope of human variation.

Some part of me is kinda pissed I that there are some experiences of reality out there that I can't have, or ever fully understand, and couldn't have at the same time as those parts that make me me.

It would be cool to know what being an ESFP is like, because it's so different. Or a 459 INFJ because I think they'd be the closest existence to one that is free & severed from reality.

That's all there is to it, really. I think.

5-4-8: More reactive and temperamental, such Fives find it harder to control their emotions than other tritypes. They are basically sensitive, reclusive, and ingenious, occasionally indulging in (romantic) day-dreams and fantasies, but once in a while their fierce, visceral side reveals itself explosively and gets to surprise people who don't know them well. These Fives are usually selfish and whimsical, considering themselves entitled to special treatment, which they will sometimes claim aggressively. They are prone to mood swings and rage outbursts.

Typical subtypes: sexual, self-preserving, 5w4

Similar tritypes: 5-8-4, 4-5-8

Flavors: innovative, temperamental, egocentric, and intense

5-8-4: Original, rebellious, temperamental, and highly individualistic and independent, these Fives can be extremely self-focused and mostly unconcerned with other people's feelings and wants. They are often inspired and have great vision which they strive to turn into reality – they have a practical side which helps them. Although brilliant and resourceful, others may find it hard to deal with their self-important, narcissistic behavior and their oversensitivity to frustration – their violent reactions can be scary.

Typical subtypes: sexual, 5w4, 5w6 (counterphobic wing)

Similar tritypes: 5-4-8, 8-5-4

Flavors: resourceful, defiant, visionary, and reactive

459 – The Contemplative Archetype

459/495: Knowledgeable and accepting 4. This is the shy, withdrawn and introspective 4. Often inhibited, this 4 is less likely to show emotions. This 4 is typically an artisan, especially if self-preserving. This 4 is gentle and has a 'wispy' energy. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, abandoned, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, not existing, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

549/594: Accepting and intuitive 5. This is the most sensitive and withdrawn 5, especially if self-preserving. This 5 is very inhibited and uncomfortable in social settings. Highly introspective, this 5 is a deep thinker with still waters running deep. The core fears are of intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, being fully embodied, not existing, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace and being abandoned.

945/954: Intuitive and knowledgeable 9. This is the most introspective, withdrawn and reserved 9, especially if self-preserving and/or introverted. This 9 is bookish and inhibited. Very quiet and sensitive, this 9 is often mistaken for a 5 or 4. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, intrusion, emptiness, ignorance, surplus, contamination, fully embodied, and not existing.

Gut: 9 Heart: 4 Head: 5

Relation to Anger

- 459s are the least comfortable with aggression and therefore can brush off external attempts to get a response from them. They can become unmovable and shy when stressed;

Personal Strengths

- 459s can really observe and contemplate their inner life and understand themselves better than any other tritypes;

Control from the Environment

- 459s are less likely to be confrontational and prefer to quietly avoid or ignore people that try to assert control onto them;

Energy Levels

- 459s are triple Withdrawn: they have the least amount of conscious energy and probably least willing to spend it in a carefree way (strongest with Self-Preservation dominant, least true with Sexual dominant);

Reaction to Change

- 459s don't usually like sudden changes or surprises because this usually means unpredictable ways of trying to fend off unnecessary stressors and uncomfortable situations;

Routine

- 459s don't mind routine that much as it this is a way to cope with an ever-changing world while finding a way to keep them from experiencing too much external stimulation; That being said, the FOUR fix might feel bogged down a bit too much by plain activities and might want to delve deeper into emotional endeavors;

General Behavior

- 459s have a hard time exerting their thoughts and feeling to people. They need regular quiet time in order to recharge and feel at ease with their environment. Because of this, they can appear invisible, forgettable, and distant. One big exception is the Social subtype, which can look more outgoing but only in specific times and places and will typically choose to talk about their preferred topics of interest;

Extraversion & social interactions

- 459s are very withdrawn, but have a distinctive arrogant streak hidden behind their shyness. They want others to make the move and feel resentful if they feel rejected.

Overall Persona

- 459s are a little more mysterious and a bit harder to crack open. They often display an avoidant or effusive stance in order to protect their feelings of deficiency.

Relation with Emotional Side

- 459s are more introspective and responsive to their own feelings. They like to feel and analyze them at the same time and can withstand a lot of personal contemplation.

Patterns & Structure

- 459s, as mention above, are triple Withdrawn. This means that this archetype has all 3 enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to go away from the outside world in order to recharge and conserve their energy. This tritype feels easily drained by external contact and prefer to limit their interaction with it. People with this archetype might feel vulnerable and unable to take on action, and thus prefer to engage more in the realm of imagination. This tritype is most compatible with a dominant Self-Preservation subtype and most at odds with a Social subtype.

Socials with this tritype wants connections and a sense of belonging, but feels the pressure of the group's expectations the most and think they can't take on the responsibilities.

SP people are the most reclusive, energy-retentive folks of the whole damn enneagram. They are the least emotionally and verbally expressive of the 459s.

Sexual subtypes are usually intense and seek fusion with their intimates. They might live off their passion through their work (if paired with secondary SP);

Interests:

- understanding the world
- solving mysteries

Mission:

- using the power of thought to understand life and help others understand it too

Blind spots:

- overly focused on inner thoughts, and finding it hard to share those with others
- overly uncertain, withdrawing from the world

Fears:

- failure
- being incompetent
- being ignorant
- being left alone

If you are a 459, you are intuitive, knowledgeable, and accepting. You want to be original, wise, and peaceful. Highly self-aware and reflective, you are very shy, reserved, and self-conscious. You need regular quiet time to reflect on your thoughts and emotions. Easily flooded with emotion, it is difficult for you to voice your ideas and feelings. You are a deep person that fits the image of “still waters run deep”.

Your life mission is to delve deeply into the mysteries of life and share your insight with others. A true philosopher (also, contemplative), you are happiest when you can write about your discoveries and discuss them with others. Making sense of your world is a never ending quest. You can be so focused on your inner world that you can become inhibited and appear to be indifferent to others. Insecure, you become moody and expect others to initiate and come toward you. Your growing edge is to recognize that your need to pull away into the private world of your making to ponder your thoughts and feelings keeps you from engaging with others. True contemplation leads to higher knowing that we are all connected in the universal unconscious. The most withdrawn of all the types.

Probably the laziest tritype.

5 + 4 has the perceptiveness and thoroughness of the type 5 mixed with the intuitiveness and sensitivity of type 4, it pushes more to this subjective aspect of both types also having a bit of the emotionality and meaning seeking of type 4.

594 testimony: I'm an introvert person, and I need time to recharge alone. In social situations, I have to split in 2 cases: when I'm with people that I've known for a long time, like classmates (not everyone, just the ones whom I bonded with whom I consider “ok”), I can be quite sociable and even expansive; instead, when I'm with strangers, people that I don't know well (or that I don't consider “ok”), I become aloof and detached, just observing, and it's ok for me, it isn't shyness, I just don't feel the need to socialize with other people. I have literally 1 person whom I talk about everything, and I consider her my only real friend I ever had. I'm reserved, nobody knows my problems except that person, and this is because I don't trust anybody (trust issues). Furthermore, I'm so afraid of being misunderstood and “betrayed” by other people (for example:

I share personal information with someone and this person doesn't keep the secret) that I feel the need to set boundaries between my inner thoughts and everyone to maintain a safe/comfort-zone. Normally I don't feel strong emotions towards anything/anyone, but in love matters (when I'm in love with someone) I can become emotional, but just when I'm alone, listening to sad songs, feeling sad... I feel angry when someone doesn't respect another person (example: you are in a subway and a group of teens put the music on at max volume, totally uncaring of others around them), when people aren't treated equally (like social classes even at school, with nerds treated like * and the cool kids ruling)... but I don't follow this rage, and it's rare to see me arguing with someone. I feel drained by arguing, and can adopt a passive-aggressive behavior after or in the middle of it. Likewise, I enjoy logic reasoning, interesting knowledge, complex topics, theorizing about things, and imagining possibilities. It's hard for me to accept that I can't understand something, like emotions, even mine, and tend to escape from problems, shifting attention between a thing or another to not feel bad or guilty. I'm lazy and disorganized, a lot, and procrastination is my second name. On my phone I've set a password to unlock it, then a password to unlock certain apps, and for a specific one even another one to be sure. I don't have a real goal, I'd just like to skip school and go to university studying physics, or another appealing (for me) subject, I don't care about money, I just need to eat and have a house to live with autonomy, so I'm not ambitious, I just love the discovery of something I consider interesting, and without basics and learning I'll never understand what I'd like to acknowledge correctly.

All 3 introverted fixes. 4+9 combo brings in an idealization of fantasy or childhood that the others wouldn't have. 5 & 9 both have a thing about not wanting to impose on others. They have philosophical inclinations.

459: Fantasy prone tritype, and while they may seem to be all off in La La Land, the 5 in their tritype can jar people with surprising commentary on observations of events that people hadn't even thought the 459 had noticed! Less confrontational or rigid than the 451 or 458, they want emotional harmony in their environment and probably won't interrupt it, even if they really should. Good mediators due to this quality as well, they wouldn't want to upset people. Though, they can come off a bit chameleon-like in adjusting themselves to the situation through 9, the 4 will be sifting through many emotions and things to identify with. It can give this tritype an almost unreal quality, and the 4 can feel lost in the many emotional blends. However, when balanced, they can exude a very harmonic atmosphere, at ease with themselves and others, and the 5 will give some sense of reality in their observations and thoughts lest they get lost and buried under the mixture of 4 and 9. This tritype is very introverted and has a very soothing, calm quality to them, compassionate yet realistic in helping others. Though they seem very calm on the outside, they probably have a very, very active internal world and may sometimes communicate it through various abstract art forms.

Most withdrawn/introspective-459, 954, 549

The 416, 459, and 469 all struggle with painful self-consciousness and inhibition.

Both the 451 and 459 are reserved and introspective and self-conscious. The 451 is very critical of themselves and others. They're very particular and have a lot of shoulds. They can be strident. Dissatisfaction is visible as their energy can be prickly. The 459 is more reserved and passive. They wait to be included. They are approachable, but hope that others will come towards them. Furthermore, they're quiet in their demeanor. They project a sense of stillness. Their energy is soft and yielding. Dissatisfaction is hidden like in the 479.

The 954 is more contemplative and the 952 will be more focused on others.

9s have a great capacity for depth, they just avoid conflict. Introspective 9s with 5 in the tritype are the intellectual 9s. (9s with 4 are the deep, emotional 9s. The 9 with the 459 tritype is all of the above.

The 459 is the most reclusive type on the Enneagram. They are humble, modest, and discreet. They can be ethereal and dreamy. They're passive and unassertive. They're shy, but usually display a pleasant countenance. They have complex inner worlds—the objective with the subjective. They are gentle, sensitive, and avoidant. Since they are so reserved, they express their anger passive-aggressively.

459 is a triple withdrawn. I imagine 459 to be more removed and cut off as a way of addressing any inner anxiety.

My 549 friend avoids confrontation as much as possible. She also “corrects” other people, but if she knows that it will lead to a conflict, she avoids her expressing her thoughts to other people. She seems soft and kind, that's the vibe she gives off.

Yeah, you would have a difficult time with the triple withdrawn 459, many people do because their withdrawal and withholding feels harsh or very uninvolved. That's the type most likely to not realize their anger until much later, or not express it at all because they get stuck in not expressing themselves and experiencing everything more internally. The 1 in your tritype makes you more likely to express discontent or negativity, while the 7 still wants to keep things light and airy. The 459 can have a heavy feeling which can be daunting to someone desiring to keep things positive and productive as your tritype or the 371 might be inclined to do.

548 are more likely than 549s to be confrontational. 549s are more practical, passive, agreeable, and have the tendency to avoid voicing put their opinions on sensitive topics.

A 459 would be pretty comfortable with separateness and solitude.

[459]: Differences with 469 comes from the differences between 5 and 6 minds. 5 is like a withdrawn mind working alone to handle situations, life, and understanding, while 6 is more oriented to connections with collectivity and other people with thoughts. It's a receptive/expressive mind, using people as support for understanding and guidance. While 5 is more about working alone, with its own maps and ideas.

As for the 459 part, it speaks to me, because it points to the actual awareness of the lack of love and the feeling of separateness for a 9. 5s and 4s are normally described as having the experience most rooted in separateness. Perhaps the distinctions are finer, though. 5s representing a feeling of separateness of self, 4 representing separateness of identity, and 9 representing an awareness of separateness from “love” or from the “whole” of the universe.

945 tritype testimonial: “So yeah, my story screams out my lack of self-awareness. I'm easily detached and withdrawn. I would say I think about things unconsciously, and I kinda go through it in my mind without realizing. Extremely unhealthy versions of my type are out of touch with reality, feeling numb emotionally, feeling like not belonging anywhere or left out. Also, not feeling that challenge or urge to do better. Kinda falling asleep to ourselves. The thing I really hate about this tritype is that: after a while in a social situation, your brain just shuts off. Sometimes I feel like I have something to say or just want to have a good time with others. But my brain is dead, blank, can't think of anything. Such an annoying and overwhelming feeling.”

About my 945 friend: “When we're in a setting with people he's unfamiliar with, he'll usually quiet down and only really speaks when spoken to. I wish that he would communicate with me a little more about how he feels, instead of lashing out whenever I notice something he's doing wrong or could be done more efficiently. He'll immediately talk about how he's just not good enough to do it any other way, or that he can't do it at all. I try to help him, but he keeps pushing me away. I'll just keep being patient with him until he's ready. Some of my other friends talk about him behind his back due to his stubborn attitude and unwillingness to cooperate with others or himself. It kind of breaks my heart that they won't be patient with him, but I can't be mad at them either because everyone's minds works and interacts with emotions and decisions differently.”

You know? I met a lot of 945s and nobody seems to have the same personality. I mean, I met one who's really smart and loves to explain things, and there is me who loves to understand things but very bad at explaining things. 945 has a wide range of personality between each individual. There are 954 with 9w8 as their core type & 4w5 as the heart-fix, and there are the ones with 9w1 as their core with 4w3 as the heart-fix.

E4 has the tri fixes 468 and 495 to deal with...where 468 push for a response while 459 move away. For example:

4x5 moves away...stops to....push for the response.

4x3 pushes for the response while moving away.

Triple withdrawn type. The most reclusive, I'm not surprised I have this one. Having this tritype truly feels like living as an observer throughout my life: very detached from reality, stuck in fantasy, lack of desire to be initiative or participate in anything that doesn't spark my interest. Never felt fit in with any part of the group, even my own family. If only I could be just a pair of eyes and a floating brain. On the other hand, when it comes to something I'm passionate about, I can be head-strong and rebellious in pursuing of those things, otherwise I'm just existing in my own fantasy world.

They're typically triple withdrawn, laid back, easy going, calm, cool-headed, carefree yet cautious, aloof yet open, reserved, solitary, observing, patient, discreet, flexible, modest, curious, intelligent, deep, complacent, content, instinctive, intuitive, aesthetic, trusting, private, and enjoys the company of only a few people. Slow to judge. Not relationship obsessed. Hopeless romantic. Individualistic, independent, and original. Likes difficult reading material. Interested in understanding people and humanity in general and enjoys bringing understanding. Shuns conflict. Intellectually curious and interested in the arts, philosophy, literature, and the social sciences. Excels in whatever they're interested in. Kind, friendly, and at times very gentle. Can appear cold and nonchalant. Unconcerned that people have trouble reading them. Introspective and reflective. Creatively expressive, imaginative, and dreamy. Wants to blend in with the environment, seeking a peaceful and comfortable place. Live and let live attitude. Accepting and respecting of others' views. Can easily see from different perspectives. Not likely to express anger. Hard to offend. Lower energy, energy comes in bursts. Cooperative rather than competitive. Not interested in leading. Questions authority. Not superficial. Appear to be emotionally stable, but can be quite emotional internally. Tries to contain emotions. Enjoys melancholic moods. Likes both listening to and playing music. Easily overwhelmed and distracted.

954 will be more prioritized in seeking knowledge to understand things, which helps them build on their sense of identity and specialty. 945 will be more prioritized in doing things (e.g., pick up hobbies) to enhance their sense of identity. Both tritypes find comfort through isolationism, so they will tend to stay at home. It is quite easy to tell the difference, actually. 954 probably researches a lot about theories and knowledge they like to acquire, and they may ask questions about anything and will research about it immediately on Google, e.g., the Big Bang Theory, as they have a key interest to learn it in DEPTH. As for 945, they do a lot of things on a broader spectrum, but it's fitting to build their sense of specialty. They're not as concerned about knowledge, rather they may pick up a few hobbies like playing the guitar, to watching an underrated, good show. They would be more focused on these kinds of activities.

I'm a 954 myself; my 9 core manifests more as avoidance than enforcing harmony (I just don't even involve myself in things if I think it's gonna be a lot of trouble, as opposed to being involved in something for the sake of creating harmony). I am RIDICULOUSLY introverted.

459 Testimonial: "This with a social 4 is just a constant loop of feeling inferior and bitter, then withdrawing, so there's nobody to be worse than and to lessen the amount of shame, for me at least. It's a lonely way of coping. I yearn for societies' approval, but I turn away because I don't have it instead of trying to earn it. I turn to academic validation because that's probably one of the few things I have a chance of being better in. Likewise, I also get very stressed when I have to work with classmates and think I am most successful by myself, but maybe that's just a general 459 occurrence."

All three Reflective Solutions Enneacards

(Enneagram Types: 4, 5, & 9) in your Enneasread.

Naturally reserved and reflective, you see yourself as intuitive, introspective, perceptive and thoughtful. Responsible and diligent, you resist taking action that is not first well considered and thought out. You dislike making sudden changes and prefer to take time to think things through before acting. When opposed, you tend to take a step back or move away from others to evaluate your circumstances to manage problems.

The 945 is very shy, sensitive, and introspective. They need time to contemplate before taking action.

594: Tends to be remote.

4-5-9: The Introvert

A true introvert. The withdrawn likes to delve within themselves in order to release their tensions and stress. The more issues that arise in their life, the farther they find themselves from the external world.

459: Shy.

Five with a nine fix: pattern seeking above all. Whimsical exploration, disposition of reluctant idealist. Open-minded, philosophical perspective. Can seem to lack focus while associating groupings of information into larger theories. Likes people and humanity as a whole, shares ideas, and is relatively easy to get along with.

For 9(w8)54s: 4 fix makes 9s likelier to have an 8 wing due to a personal sense of separateness and individuality;

For 9(w1)54s: their head type is more than likely 5w6, since they seek greater routine and comforts, which contributes to the core motivations of 9 and 6. Their 4 fix is more muted than the former.

Another example would be a 4-6-8. Here we have a more aggressive and reactive Type 4 than say a 4-9-5, who would be more withdrawn, passive (9) and avoidant (5).

The key is the “specialty” or focus of attention created by the intersection of the 3 types in the Tritype®. With 459 they all concur that it is essential to stand back and be reflective and introspective before engaging with others. The overall desire of the 459 Tritype® is for others to move towards them in social situations and make them feel more comfortable sharing, as they feel inhibited and do not jump into conversations. The false belief is that others are more at ease with social relating. What is often missed is that many Tritypes® move towards others and engage in conversation because they themselves feel so ill at ease if they don't...and sometimes they find they are so nervous they cannot stop talking...especially the extroverted social 6.

The withdrawing types (4-5-9) have repressed their instinctive center with a tendency towards self-protection, inaction, and isolation, and can thus be defined as seeking enlightened solutions and being Horney's withdrawing type.

4-5-9 would rely on their sensations completely. This makes them the most self-focused of the types. It's about what you experience. Like a 9, they tend to avoid things they find uncomfortable (the keyword here is what they find uncomfortable. Not what is generally accepted as uncomfortable). Like a 5, tend to lean towards enrichment. And like a 4, establish their identity towards what they live through. Naturally, what we personally experience in ourselves (our emotions) are a part of what we experience. Since this type is so internally focused, they tend to live the most in their own minds and their own world. Thus, their five-fix tends to gather a lot of information on themselves. Their four-fix and ever-changing sensations may make them slightly more likely to feel confused as to who they are. Experiencing this confusion, they may analyze this as a problem and perhaps something that shouldn't be one. Well, like I said, I'd need to think about it more. But mainly, this fix relies heavily on what they go through and what they live through. Especially on feeling sensations. I'm not really quite sure on what else to say, really. The Withdrawn Group consists of enneagram types 4, 5, and 9. Each of these types are withdrawn in their own ways, but they all move away from people in hopes of earning what they desire (attention for 4s, security for 5s, or autonomy for 9s)

Pros of the Withdrawn Group types: they are introspective, imaginative, and not attention seeking.

Cons of the Withdrawn Group types: they have a hard time in large groups and with taking charge.

Type 4s in the Withdrawn Group

Enneagram type 4s move away from people by withdrawing into their idealized self in hopes of earning attention for being their unique selves.

Type 5s in the Withdrawn Group

5s move away from people by withdrawing into their minds in hopes of earning security.

Type 9s in the Withdrawn Group

9s move away from people by withdrawing into their safe inner sanctum in hopes of earning autonomy.

Advice for the Withdrawn Group

Be aware that as a withdrawn type, you tend to default to your thoughts and dreams in order to think that you are alright. This is because withdrawn types are “unproductive” in their doing. Try to be present in the moment and not dwell so long on thinking that you never get around to doing.

Let's talk about the Withdrawn Types - 9's, 4's, and 5's.

A Withdrawn Type's social stance is to retreat into themselves or move away from people to achieve what they want or need. These are the types who tend to feel out of place in a group and have a sense that they don't belong. More than other numbers, 9's, 4's, and 5's have an ability to reflect on their inner space and are very in touch with their imaginations.

Enneagram 9 has a primary drive for control. They may appear as if they like being part of a group, but will disengage if they feel threatened. If they start to feel like someone is crossing a line into their territory, they will disconnect and retreat in order to protect themselves and their loved ones. Unlike 4's and 5's, 9's have the ability to remain physically present, but withdraw mentally.

Enneagram 4 has a primary drive for identity. They often withdraw because they don't feel like they have anything in common with anyone. Fours can come off as mysterious or stand-offish. When they retreat, it may be because the social situation makes them uncomfortable, but they likely hope that someone will notice and come after them.

Enneagram 5 has a primary drive for safety and security. They often feel out of place in social situations and prefer to watch from afar. Groups are more comfortable to 5's when they can identify the purpose of the gathering, but spontaneous get-togethers can confuse them. Unlike 4's, when they retreat, they don't want to be chased down. They believe their safety and security comes from disconnecting and being alone.

The Withdrawn Stance as the name suggests are those types that 'move away' from people. Here we find the types that focus on thinking and feeling, making them highly imaginative. It is hard to see how their Freudian association, the Id, can be linked with these distant types. However, Freud himself remarked that it was 'thinkers and poets' who were most in connection with their subconscious.

Type 5 often withdraws the most physically, strongly asserting their need for privacy and withdrawing from the world. Type 4 withdraws socially, taking time to construct their own individuality separate from others. While Type 9 doesn't necessarily physically withdraw from the world, they are guilty of zoning out with people, a mental withdrawal into an inner sanctum of being.

Types of the Withdrawn Stance can all benefit from moving themselves into the world and really being present within it. Often the types can develop great skills and talents in their time by themselves, but do not ever present these to the world, focusing rather on keeping it all to themselves. It is good to learn that using these skills and showing them to the world can be as rewarding as developing. The Withdrawn Stance also has a unique quirk in that they can feel a disconnect to their humanness, frequently feeling detached from their body and more present within their imagination and fantasy.

Withdrawn Type:

The people under this type gravitate towards the thinking center (Feeling) and do not have a lot of contact with the body center (doing). Emotions and feelings come easily for them, and as a result, they don't do a lot of physical work, not utilizing their bodies to its fullest potential.

Type 5 is recognized as being more in line with their thinking center, using their feelings to support their thoughts. They draw back from people and retreat into their selves to think.

Type 4 draw their strength in their feeling center, and use their thinking to put their feelings into overdrive. They also withdraw into themselves, but to live in an imaginary construct.

Type 9 belongs to the Instinctive corner, and as such, they have no meaningful contact with the doing center. They might look to be busy, but as they don't have a concrete plan, they waste a lot of their time.

The withdrawns (Horney's “moving away from people”) include types Four, Five, and Nine. These types do not have much differentiation between their conscious self and their unconscious, unprocessed feelings, thoughts, and impulses. Their unconscious is always welling up into consciousness through daydreams and fantasies. All three types respond to stress by moving away from engagement with the world and into an “inner space” in their imagination. Nines withdraw into a safe and carefree Inner Sanctum, Fours withdraw into a romantic and idealized Fantasy Self, and Fives withdraw into a complex and cerebral Inner Tinker Toy. In common language, they all can “zone out” and go into their imaginations very easily. These types have problems with staying in their physicality and with getting out of their imaginations and into action.

The automatic sense of self that arises when they come into a room is, “I am not part of what is going on. I am not like these other people. I don't fit in.” The Four and the Five most clearly feel separate from others. They reinforce their sense of self by staying apart and being different. In a room full of people, Fours would typically be standoffish and aloof and would act in some kind of “mysterious” fashion. On the other hand, if they were not in the proper mood, they might simply leave, especially since their sense of social obligation is tenuous (“It is too much for me. I'm just not up to it right now. . .”).

Fives might not mind being there, but they would be just as happy at home reading a book or pursuing their own interests. If they stayed, Fives would probably sit on the sidelines and watch everybody else. They would be more likely to socialize if they could have a context, like photographing the proceedings with a camcorder.

Nines might well enjoy the gathering and even participate, but they would remain disengaged. They might nod and smile while thinking about a fishing trip, or they might “tune out” almost entirely and simply “tag along” with someone, allowing the other person to do most of the social interacting while the Nine remains benignly silent, or good-humoredly unresponsive. Earlier in this chapter, we saw that the Triads tell us what each type most wanted in childhood. The types in the Instinctive Triad most wanted autonomy: they sought independence, the ability to assert their own will and direct their own life. The types in the Feeling Triad most wanted attention: to be seen and validated by their parents. Lastly, the types in the Thinking Triad most wanted security: to know that their environment was safe and stable.

The Withdrawn Style (Types 4,5,9)

People whose dominant Social Style is the withdrawn style are quiet, introverted, and introspective. They enjoy spending lots of time by themselves and feel uncomfortable in large groups. They don't overtly seek attention and don't wish to assert themselves much. Likewise, they feel uncomfortable taking charge or in competition. Instead, they feel excited by their own imagination. They have a sense of being different from others and not being part of their environment. Under stress, they withdraw from the world and into their inner space and imagination.

These people are not immediately comfortable working in groups and often prefer to work alone. They contemplate and refine their ideas by themselves. They will not present their ideas or assert themselves until they are very confident in their position.

These people are out of touch with their instinctual drives. They have a hard time feeling their vitality and substance. To compensate for this imbalance, they identify more with their fantasies, thoughts, and dreams than with their own physical body.

These people move away from others (withdraw) to get their needs met.

The Withdrawn Style of Fours

Fours want attention and seek it by withdrawing from the superficial world of the ordinary. Fours also withdraw by being different, unique, and mysterious. If Fours are sufficiently unique, distant, and mysterious, they will attract the attention from those who care. Playing hard to get is a test to make sure others care enough about them. Fours spend a large part of their time daydreaming and fantasizing about the attention they would like. Fours so much enjoy these fantasies that they have a hard time waking up from their daydreams. Under stress, Fours will retreat further into their imagination to sustain their self-image.

The Withdrawn Style of Fives

Fives want security and seek it by withdrawing from a world they see as threatening. Fives also withdraw by minimizing their needs and dependencies. Fives spend large amounts of time studying and thinking about the world—so much so that they become more attached to their interpretation of the world than to direct observation. Under stress, Fives retreat further into their minds to understand the source of the stress.

The Withdrawn Style of Nines

Nines want autonomy and seek it by withdrawing from an endlessly changing world to get their own peaceful and stable space. Nines also withdraw by minimizing their wants and desires. Nines enjoy their time relaxing and fantasizing about their harmonious world (inner and outer). However, Nines fall into the trap of becoming more attached to their idealized relationships than to their real relationships. Under stress or pressure to change, Nines hang on to their idealizations rather than giving up the stability of the status quo.

Moving away from others, focus either self or others without moving towards others, “withdraw” to get needs

4: Image of inadequacy and separateness, broken alien

5: Detachment from people to preserve the self, nerdy alien

9: Introspection, withdrawing from self into a haze

Types 4, 5, & 9 are in the Withdrawn group, and they withdraw away from others to get what they desire.

5-4-9: Shy, somewhat fragile, and a bit romantic, such Fives tend to put on a congenial façade to hide their rich inner worlds from society. They outwardly appear friendly but reserved, and are usually mysterious to other people, who sense there is more depth and intensity hidden behind their amiable mask. These Fives have rich imaginations and love to immerse themselves in thoughts and fantasies. They are introspective, dreamy, creative, and socially withdrawn, but also disorganized and painfully avoidant.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, sexual, 5w4

Similar tritypes: 5-9-4, 9-5-4, 4-5-9

Flavors: insightful, imaginative, enigmatic, and unstructured

5-9-4: Reclusive, modest, discreet, and quite dreamy and unassertive, such Fives possess a vast imagination in which they spend most of their time among their theories, fantasies and vivid memories. They have a somewhat bohemian charm to them – they are relaxed, casual, creative, and a bit reckless. Usually pleasant and undisturbed on the outside, they hide complex inner worlds in which reality interweaves with fantasy, real with imaginary, the objective with the subjective. These Fives are gentle, sensitive, and avoidant and tend to express their anger in a passive-aggressive manner.

Typical subtypes: self-preserving, sexual, 5w4

Similar tritypes: 5-4-9, 9-5-4, 4-5-9

Flavors: laid-back, unconventional, imaginative, and random

468 – The Truth Teller Archetype

468/486: Inquisitive and direct 4. This is the most rebellious, reactive, and direct 4, especially if sexual subtype. This is the uninhibited 4 with strong emotional expression. This 4 is the emotional truth teller and the one to say that the emperor has no clothes. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

648/684: Direct and intuitive 6. This is the most reactive, creative, and emotional 6. Highly rebellious, this 6 is almost always the counter-phobic 6 with a heroic nature. Generally, this 6 vacillate between being 8ish or 4ish. The core fears of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace and being abandoned.

846/864: Intuitive and inquisitive 8. This is the most intense, reactive, and emotional 8. This 8 is loyal, individualistic, rebellious, and confrontational. They're the most opinionated and outspoken 8. This 8 seeks alliances with friends and foes, keeping enemies close. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos.

Gut: 8 Heart: 4 Head: 6

Emotional Expression

- 468s are the most reactive tritype and can be very prone to overreact to any changes in their immediate environment that they deem threatening;

Activity

- 468s are very active in general and can jump quickly into action when needed. They can be impulsive into thinking they need to react to what seems to be disingenuous or dangerous;

Dealing with Own Anxiety

- 468s erase their anxiety when they confront people or situations that seem fishy to them. They feel their best when they say what everyone doesn't want to say or hear;

Emotional Life

- 468s are the most reactive tritype of all and cannot stand seeing and feeling that something's off or fake about any situation; They are very volatile and can swing from peace into reaction very quickly;

Intellectual Processes

- 468s look for inconsistencies in their environment and in people, trying to call out anything that seems inauthentic or congruent with the overall narrative. They are hyper reactive and argumentative in order to invalidate the person's opinion;

Security

- 468s find security through finding out the truth about any situation, especially murky ones. They like to be the one reporting inconsistencies and being praised for their audacity;

Social Roles

- 468s are the whistle-blower that wants to remain true to himself and say the truth no matter what happens;

Dealing with emotions

- 468s are the most attentive to their inner states and can be overly reactive in doing so;

Shame

- 468s introspect their shame in being different and separate from others. They try to ease the pain by calling off inconsistencies and telling people the truth about situations;

Potential Problems

- 468s are so reactive that they might not realize that they need to stop and analyze the situation more before jumping to conclusions. They can call off a situation prematurely and can get into hot water because of it. Additionally, they can be a little too aggressive and threatening when trying to denounce a situation or prove their point and can dissuade people from believing in them. It can be really hard for the archetype to refrain their emotional side even when discussing everyday subjects and because of that, they may not realize that they are being reactive and emotional about something;

Patterns & Structure

- 468s are the triple reactive and intense tritype. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to track down inconsistencies and false pretenses in order to feel secure and in control of their environment. They use their intuition and emotional intelligence in order to sniff out the truth behind events and people, and can protect others while doing so.

When combined with the self-preservation subtype, this tritype is very focused on protecting their close friends and family and maintaining material security. They are less emotionally reactive than the other two subtypes.

Sexual subtypes are the most intense and reactive combination of all. They want to address troublesome situations readily and are extremely persistent and not easily deterred when proved otherwise. They are fiercely protective of their loved ones and can be very possessive and jealous.

The social subtype is more militant and socially engaged. They can fight for their rights and tend to be uncompromising when doing so. They also protect vulnerable or marginalized people and are often deeply involved with personal causes;

Interests:

- being precise
- finding out the truth

Mission:

- seeking the truth, uncovering hidden information, and sharing it with others

Blind spots:

- overly focused on pitfalls, wanting to be in control too much
- overly suspicious

Fears:

- isolation
- anxiety
- being criticized
- being a coward

If you are a 468, you are intuitive, inquisitive, and protective. You want to be original, certain, and straightforward. You are highly sensitive and emotional. Furthermore, you track inconsistencies and are like the ‘canary in the coal mine,’ calling off hidden agendas, deception, and ulterior motives. You are very intense and can, at times, be overly emotional and reactive. You may have strong feelings, but you are also fiercely loving and supportive.

Your life mission is to identify what is insincere and not what it appears to be, and alert others of potential hazards. A whistleblower, you are happiest when you are in a position to help others from being misled. You can be so focused on what can go wrong and on potential hazards that you miss how controlling you become and your impact on others and what is truly important and meaningful.

Subjective truth and over reactivity are the blind spots of the 468s. The growing edge for ‘truth tellers’ is learning to let go by having faith in others and a power greater than their own (6), realizing that their truth may not be ‘the’ truth (8) and letting go emotionally rather than intensifying feelings (4). It is only by letting go of their position that 468s will feel a sense of inner peace.

This truth is very challenging for the high-strung and emotionally intuitive 468s because they value transparency. The key is for them to see that they do not see themselves the way others see them, and that they are just as transparent as others. They can learn a great deal about themselves and their impact on others by listening to what others have to say about them.

“These Tritypes with type 6 leading are paradoxical. Ironically, the 6s with this Tritype are the most hyper-reactive 6, but they are still tentative and apprehensive. Their mental projections can make their reactions very confusing to others. They may at times show their anxiety and look timid and in need of support, and at other times they can be so intensely assertive and provocative that their needs go unseen. The high side of these Tritypes is that they are extremely devoted and dutiful to those to whom they are attached. They are very loyal and protective.”

468: More of an introverted tritype than extroverted. Somewhat fearful, so are in turn confrontational, justice seeking, and somewhat turbulent. Also, very blunt as is 458, though likely to be more aggressive and prompting. Inquisitive and very reactive. Sensitive, possibly belligerent. Calls things out as they see them, though outspoken, still an introverted type. Sees the risk of situations and warns others, though sometimes misses the fact that they can come off a bit too opinionated and reactive in proportion to the actual situation. Challenging. Very intense blend. Somewhat impulsive. Assertive. May feel that “everyone is out to get them” although it may not be true. When more developed, they gain the trust of others as they know this tritype will look out for them and protect them from what they perceive as something potentially harmful. Emotionally reactive, rebellious, and overall, quite an interesting blend.

Sometimes this tritype sucks. I'll "retaliate" against perceived threats, and then I find out I read the whole situation wrong. Other times, it's good for putting up boundaries, but that can become really unhealthy if they don't actually need to be there. More often than not, I think people of this tritype had people close to them betray their trust. Makes you guarded and somewhat cynical.

Probably one of the most ruthless and irritable tritypes in the entire tritype system. 486 is as well, but 468 for some reason has constant doubts of themselves and keep getting defensive and live in constant fear in contrast to 486. Those types probably live the roughest and most unfair moment of their lives, and I wish them the best to improve. Much love from a 468! <333

These people live for their values. They always say what they know is right. Of course, they have social skills, maybe they don't make a sound in despotic places. But they usually do not do injustice. We said that the 468s will protect their values, but these are definitely not the traditional mold values of a society. 468, on the other hand, does not care about what society's values and does not think about the future because it lives with some values. Sometimes in order to be rich, you need to have good social relations, not just skills. For this, you resort to lies and fakes. The 468 type cannot do this. He can't do this. He can't manage to lie. I'm not saying this type can't be manipulative, but most of the time, he jumps around with everyone by saying what he knows is right. He can't be rich anyway. That's why he doesn't care about material things. Even though this tritype is criticized a lot, I think that I am this type. And it's very painful. I'm also very angry. It's sad to live with that. Anyway, these triple types can even be the initiator of some rebellions. You know, they can't be the pioneers because these activities require leadership skills. But these types are too rebellious. My advice to them is to exercise their anger. Let them take it out. Sometimes I punch the wall out of anger. I'm thinking of buying a punching bag too. When I'm angry, I try to stay away from everyone and isolate myself to protect others from my wrath.

468 and 469 come across as very different because the 8 in the 486 makes the 6 counter-phobic and therefore comes across as more aggressive. The 469 comes across as more passive-aggressive.

The 468 reacts and rings the alarm to prevent mankind from making a mistake to calm down, and the 469 doubts and procrastinates to avoid making a mistake...to calm down.

This tritype has trouble with controlling their facial expressions. Like whenever I feel like I'm appalled by someone or something, people could always tell (even when I try to hide it)

With this tritype, I swear my emotions are controlling me at this point. Also, it makes me feel crazy when I alert people and protect them by telling them the truth about something, and they just respond "I didn't ask for your opinion" when they clearly need help to see the truth before a disaster happens.

468: Probably the most neurotic tritype of them all, though 648 might be as well. I also see this tritype as the least tolerant of greasy and shady people (like car salesmen, politicians, crooked businessmen, and other grifters). I guess that was already implied from the “The Truth Teller” moniker, though.

The 468 is constantly calling off truth as they see it, and sees it as their business to warn people of the potential downfalls and pitfalls in the emotional and mental world. It's the type in each center that is “truth telling” and tends to be the most reactive, even hyper reactive. She said it's typically the sexual subtype, but she's seen social subtypes too. There's a tendency to feel an acute sense of disappointment because their incredibly acuity at seeing the problems ahead or the potential pitfalls of any situation causes people to misunderstand their reactivity and emotionality.

468 push for a response while 459 moves away.

8 in any trifix tends to give license to the other fixes to just “be” unapologetically. It's not automatic aggression, but rather an allowance of being. With 6 fix, that means the questioning and calling out inconsistencies/untruths is louder and more shameless. 8 tends to be uncomfortable with the natural need of 6 to submit, and so it tends to make 6 more counter-phobic but less trusting/warm/friendly. 8 being a reactive type brings 6 into a place where it expects more negativity and can be unapologetically bold.

I am very intense and have a very hard time controlling my emotions sometimes. I care a lot about other people and I become easily attached to people even when I shouldn't be. Likewise, I can also make competitions out of things that shouldn't be competitions. I would consider myself also very loyal.

You have all three Immediate Responder Enneacards

(Enneagram Types: 4, 6, & 8) in your Enneasread.

You see yourself as intense, responsive, challenging, and instinctive. You avoid insincerity and people with hidden agendas. Like a canary in a coal mine, you are sensitive to what others miss. You tend to react strongly to pretense, seeking to call off the truth before moving forward.

The 468 is a true challenger and truth teller. The 4 may be shy, but this Tritype is very intense and reactive—quick to speak their mind. The 485 is the true intellectual that has strong opinions about their feelings and thoughts, but less reactivity. Sexual instinct with 4 dominant makes both tritypes more intense. The 468, however, is more dutiful and feisty, whereas the 458 is one of the tritypes that lives in their head researching and following their own muse.

As a sx468, It will feel counter-intuitive, but you can learn ways to manage the anxiety that is underneath the reactivity. When you feel threatened and the fear of being inadequate rises, take a long, deep breath...and exhale. It is simply your adrenaline running and filling you with emotional anxiety. It is emotional panic and fear of isolation, blame, abandonment and/or separation. Likewise, it feels life-threatening, so remind yourself that the intense feelings will eventually decrease. Stay connected to your gut and you will feel more connected to yourself. That way you can deliver your truth of the message and be heard rather than becoming the problem.

4s in general hold the archetype of the mystery, the erotic feminine principle, chaos, beauty, tragedy, and most of all the role of emotional familiarity. The 468 is meant to name the emotional truth that is unspoken and therefore missing, and to go on a quest to find it.

Each Enneagram Type has a trap, a hook, so to speak. The trap for the 468 is believing that your identity is tied to what you name and to need others to acknowledge it or believe it. If you hold on to the higher truth of your intuitive insights rather than your feelings surrounding them, more and more, they will flow through you to the right person, at the right time. I have found the 468 to be at times one of the most challenging Tritypes, but more importantly, by far one of the most sensitive, intuitive, compassionate, and heroic ones.

The 468 has a counter-phobic 6 and....the 4 is counter-envious...as in...they hate being envious and try to contain their negative emotions. The problem is that the 468 is impulsive and emotional...often confronting before they think about it.

The 486 is much more assertive than the 416. The 461 tends to being very critical of themselves to avoid being criticized. This tritype is very particular. The 416 hesitates and the 486 impulsively reacts. A perceived threat to the primary instinct triggers the tritype.

846 vs 845. These two tritypes are very different. Both take charge and seek solutions. The 846 is one of the most confrontational tritypes. The other is the 836. The 6 amplifies the 8 need for loyalty and trust. The 845 is more introverted and introspective. The 854 has 5 as a line of connection as well in their tritype and makes this 8 more scholarly and focused on depth.

4-6-8: The Hot Head

If you are an Enneagram type 4, you might have a Tritype® of 468. This would mean you lead with your heart and that you predominantly use type 4, however, you will also use the strategies of type 6—your head type, and the type 8—your gut type. Your Enneagram type 4 would still be in charge. However, when the 4 strategies fail to produce results and all permutations (wings and lines of connections) of type 4 have been exhausted, you will then shift to use the dominant type in each of the other two centers to manage problems and create solutions. The type 4 is always in charge of this Trilectic system, and all 3 types in the Tritype® continuously operate in a rapid, descending and repetitive spiral.

Their reactivity characterizes this type. They tend to initiate conflict and take offense easily. They may feel that everyone is out to get them.

The 458 is an active archetype...just more withdrawn...not passive like the librarian... but more so the expert as they gather knowledge but have a very definite point of view like the 478 and 468.

Other persistent tritypes are the 125, 145, 468. Aggression with tenacity or persistence makes one able to be relentless in their pursuits.

The 468 has the instinctual, emotional type in each center. And, there is a need to call off the truth of what is unspoken. I find the 468 to be very persistent... relentlessly so when seeking whatever ignites their passion

Eight with a four fix: the moody, loner eight. Distinct outsider quality; as if on a highly personal mission. Tendency to feel exempt from conventional rules and circumstances.

Another example would be a 4-6-8. Here we have a more aggressive and reactive Type 4 than say a 4-9-5, who would be more withdrawn, passive (9), and avoidant (5).

The 468 is always visible as this tritype shoots from the hip and voices their concerns and opinions. They are the truth tellers.

I'm a 468. I'm direct, as I find this is the best way to communicate my feelings and myself to others (being as sensitive as I am, I try my best to be compassionate, or not step anyone's toes while doing this. My mom says this makes me articulate). I feel confident in certain areas, but not so much in others (though I'd die if anyone knew that). Others have told me I am funny, and seem tough (though I cry at the drop of the hat). I'm a good judge of character, and am very intuitive. I can tell when people are dishonest or not how they want to seem, and it frustrates me when others do not see things from my perspective. If a friend undermines my judgment, I feel betrayed, and they seem disloyal. I find my biggest struggle is feeling hypersensitive. I can recognize when I'm being that way, but if something upsets me, it's often an incredibly overwhelming and powerful feeling that I feel I can't just put aside. At the time, I feel reacting is standing up for myself, but I later feel badly for hurting someone else.

In that case, it's much more possible you're a 468 because it adds an intensity in 6 that makes it look like a 4.

Sx 4s, 6s, and 8s can all be pretty fucking ruthless in their extermination of foes; take a sx 684, and you have a veritable pit bull, someone who potentially sees extermination as their mission. And given the truth-telling nature of that tritype and sx/so (at least their truth), that tendency is also compounded. (Truth telling = extermination of lies)

I think all the emotion and reactivity of the 684 tritype and the passion and impulsiveness of sx/so is more than enough to over-ride the typical 6w5 characteristics of caution and consideration.

As a 468, I find it tough to be up all the time. I see the darkness, the shadow, that the emperor has no clothes, I see the truth behind the persona, the lie we tell collectively to avoid the pain underneath.

When the 4 and 6 are in the tritype, there is more negativity as a strategy to prevent making a mistake that will bring shame, blame, and criticism. This is most true of the 461 and then 468 and then the 469.

Has anyone else with this tritype had trouble letting things go?

When I finally got that I was a 6, I was able to see how I tested and provoked all the time. Finding out that I am a 684 really helped me to see even more.

Most of the time, I am playful and teasing. I watch 8 come in and push my 6 even more into justice issues. I am super loyal, to a fault. Not only that, but I like to have fun, but I can be trouble now and then. I get that 4 is my heart type, so I can be over the top at times. My emotions take over, and it happens so fast that it is hard to manage my tendency to blurt. I call a spade a spade, which is why I thought I was an 8. I can see that I also need depth and meaning and am moody like a 4.

When they all come together in reaction, I am way too intense for people. I still fight this tendency.

I also know a sp/sx 6w7 684. He's probably the most independent 6 I've ever known. Could be mistaken for an 8. His reactivity and intensity comes out much more in his actions, and the sp hides a lot of it from view. You see the consequences of his reactivity rather than the reactivity itself.

Rebelling, reacting, and defending. (4-6-8)

Being a 468 and with the sexual instinctive center, I find myself in a constant exploration of truth, and I find I discover my truth most profoundly in meaningful, open, intimate, honest connections that serve this higher purpose and not the relationship itself. It is the honest, healthy mirroring that propels this quest into an accelerated personal growth of enlightenment.

The sx 468 is very impacted by truth and speaking to what is hidden, unknown, or unspoken. The intensity of the sx 468 puts this tritype on the fast track.

sp 468. Truth is fundamental in my life too. It requires calm, openness, free from mental noise or emotional reaction. Slow exploring and understanding. It feels like being free from emotional hooks and forget false views from the society without fighting them, to restore a peaceful and benevolent sense of my own goodness and truth at 1. After that, I can become really happy and powerful at helping others by simply explaining what I've understood about life.

The 458, 468 and 478 are all truth tellers in their own way. The 468 is the one that is hyper reactive and still seeks a fair authority.

As an Ennea-type 8 with a tritype of 846, the 4 heart fix plays out in an 8ish way. You still see the 8's motivations driving the 4, but the outward appearance of the defense mechanisms or behaviors becomes 4ish in nature when the heart fix gains prominence. This would be the same for the head fix.

468. As a 4, I don't like doing things. I like living things. So I try to find the things in which doing becomes living. It's writing novels, short stories, writing and recording music. What I like best is listening to the result when it's beautiful, touching, complete, and magical. I'm my greatest fan. But also love learning from people that have gone further than me, in reading or talk. Now I develop another mode of doing where discipline is focused on. This is training. I love training to play or sing as perfectly as I can. I relax, concentrate, and leave everything behind. It's energizing and brings clarity and purity. In this mode, 6 disappears, 4 stops self-absorption. 1 rules.

I can't speak for other 486s, but I like ideas and the search for truth and meaning, which means I'm constantly searching for new information, constantly curious, and one train of thought leads to another. (I even speak in parenthetical notes!) However, I feel better about myself when I get up and do more physical tasks, such as doing artwork, gardening, organizing, or cooking. I also find that when it comes to my teaching career, I'm motivated more by calling than duty. The focus on reading and research in order to understand theoretical foundations, derive meaningful insights, and gain inspiration to share with students is my constant driving force. (I've got a big, strong 5 wing operating underground, too.)

The main difference between 864 and 854 is their level of emotional expressiveness when confronted with external data that they feel is off-putting or falsified. Truth-Tellers (864) are immediate in their reactivity and want to challenge authority by taking off any sense of falsehood that they deem illegitimate. Their minds are like lighting: they see things unfolding far in advance compared to most tritypes and want to call off what they consider potentially harmful or dangerous to those who are close to them. They are often anti-authoritarian and are wary of forces of oppression. Because of this, they can be so alarming and aggressive in their attempt to warn people that they can become exhausting or controlling to others. Overall, the key to understand which tritype fits best is to see which enneatype in one center is more present consistently throughout our life: is your desire to retreat into your mind and be unaffected by your environment (FIVE) stronger than your need to feel safe and certain of any situation you're in atm (SIX)? Do you seek validation from others and are secretly doubtful of yourself (SIX) more than you want to amass personal knowledge and feel safe by knowing a lot (FIVE)?

Both 4s and 6s can be emotional. The question is what are you emotional about? In terms of difficult behaviors...

648 reactive, edgy

The sx with 4 brings emotional intensity and a need for closeness with desired intimates...and, there is anger if intimacy is thwarted or denied. The 468 is impulsive and highly reactive. The focus is on immediate resolution. The 469 feels a great deal of doubt and in general is not as reactive. There is more of a tendency to hesitate, plan and prepare with more anxiety.

The 469 is more phobic than the 468.

As 4 is dominant, in addition to seeing themselves as intuitive and deep with a need for beauty and aesthetics., the 479s see themselves as loving, innovative and gentle, the 468 is intense and iconoclastic and the 469 is thoughtful and introspective.

The 468 feels more inclined to be the truth teller at all costs, so they take greater risks

I'm pretty intense and reactive. Inside I carry a lot of anger, shame, protectiveness, and courage. I have to take a lot of deep breaths throughout the day to center myself. I'm willing to confront people, which has gotten me in a lot of trouble. If I have a conflict with someone, I like it to be finished. I like things out in the open. I am very invested in what is really going on underneath the surface...so I'm thinking 468.

Sexual instinct combined with the 6 and 8 brings a strong sense of justice and a great need for loyalty. The sx 468 craves and gives devotion. The 468's heart is broken if they feel unseen or invisible to those they are bonded to...it feels like a deep betrayal if they feel like their feelings don't matter. They can't move forward until they feel heard. David says love your 4, hate your 4, but don't ignore your 4. When hurt, this tritype can come across as an emotional 8.

I know that in an intimate relationship, I feel deeply hurt and betrayed when my partner doesn't validate what I see or feel. For example, I have said to boyfriends, "that girl was flirting with you, and she was disrespecting me." If my partner dismisses me, doesn't acknowledge what I know happened, then I am deeply wounded...I start attempting to drive my point home by getting louder or being persistent. I wanted him to let me know that my intuition was right and display to the girl that he was taken. Likewise, I have found that it helps the 468 and the 4 in general to remember that others for the most part are not trying to be insensitive. They simply see the situation through a different lens. The key is to remember that as a 4, you know and feel things at a deep and intuitive level. But...it is also important to remember that you will feel much better about your circumstances when you put your insights into context. Think of how the other person might be feeling based on their type and life experiences rather than your own. The trap for the 468 is to feel hurt by drawing the wrong conclusion from a disappointing interaction. Your intuitions are correct, but your conclusion may be flawed if you haven't considered the context.

Do you feel angry with him and then angry with yourself for being angry? Most sexual 468 do. It triggers the feelings of being inadequate. Be kind to the part of you that feels insignificant to your mate. Remember who you are...find the way that you unconsciously denigrate your feelings. It may elude you, but it is always there for 4s. Your reality is real. Simply add the critical data that will remind you that you are whole and complete regardless of how you feel treated. It is a very tall order for any 4 or sexual subtype but especially for the sexual 468. It can, however, be the way back to your true self when you feel hurt and disoriented.

Don't be [angry/ashamed], it's the way you were made. And, that 4 intensity, when channeled, can change others' lives for the better. 4s are pioneers in their own way, and Sx4s can be very powerful. The fear of abandonment with 4s is very high, so they unconsciously over blame themselves for relationship issues. The more autonomous types have the opposite problem and need to become more self-aware of their healthy dependencies and of their role in impacting others.

"146, 468, and 469 all share a hypersensitivity to negative feedback, whether it's blame, shame, or judgement. Criticism is taken directly personally (4) and responded with some degree of emotional reactivity (6). Katharine Faurve made an amusing analogy of 4s: while most people would try to avoid arrows being shot at them, a 4 would actually catch an arrow flying at them and use it to stab themselves. This imagery pretty much depicts how criticism is received."

Why are 468s so intense?

All 468s, regardless of the order of the types in their Enneagram Tritype®, have a strong innate sense of urgency. The 468 is the Enneagram Tritype® that comprises the emotionally expressive type from each of the 3 centers: head (567), heart (234), and gut (891). As such, they are visceral and reactive. They respond immediately to any and all perceived threats, whether real or imagined.

Truth Teller

I call this Tritype® the 'Truth Teller' because those with this Tritype® feel an intense need to call off their view of reality and say that 'the emperor has no clothes' even if they will be chastised for saying it.

Biological Imperative

Think of the 468's viewpoints and responses as important biological imperatives. Everyone and every family and/or group needs those that will not delay and will act instantly in an emergency.

The Enneagram 468 defense strategy is uniquely designed to handle emergencies. Many professions, such as high-risk emergency medical services, require employees that are sensitive to the needs of others but are still able to make life or death decisions straightaway and without hesitation.

The 468s have a finely tuned sense of emotional attunement and sense what others feel (4). They feel potential threats at a sharper pitch (6) than the other Tritypes®. They also have a visceral experience of their emotions, with an intense need to take immediate action (8) and voice their concerns (468). Likewise, they are highly intuitive and are alert to imminent threats long before others. They are fiercely loyal and protective of those they love and whomever or whatever they care about. They are willing to speak their truth regardless of the consequences. They also track their instinctual intuitions and warn others in an attempt to manage their own emotional distress.

Too Intense?

Due to their emotional sensitivity and sense of urgency, 468s tend to react immediately to whatever upsets them before they can stop and think about the best way to say or do something. There are times when their immediate reaction is essential and necessary, but there are far more times when their style is perceived as far too much and expressed far too often. The reason for this is that the 468s can frequently react prematurely before they have all the facts. Due to their impulsivity, they also find it difficult to stop and consider how they should deliver their message in a manner that others will respect and value.

The problem is that in a heightened emotional state, 468s say things with a great deal of intensity. They can lose sight of what is called for and also what is in their own best interest. When they are emotionally upset and feel unheard, they often become angry and can say things they really don't mean. At these times, others see them as over the top and inappropriate. Ironically, the very same attributes that make them great in an emergency can make them appear emotionally out of control when there is not an emergency others can see. Having said that, the level of health of the 468 has a lot to do with how they voice their concerns, both what they say and how they say it.

When the 468s are stressed, their reactivity increases. This intensity of emotion begins to diminish the value of what they are trying to address. To others, they are seen as complaining and crying wolf. Over time, if the 468 remains in distress, they will often lose the social skills needed for others to listen to what they have to say. If this continues, the 468s may become even more anti-social and can be so intense and belligerent that others will ignore them. Sadly, their concerns will go unheard and be invalidated.

Working with the 468

468s can have trouble identifying what is a true emergency and what just feels like an emergency. If their internal alarm bells go off, the 468s are in fight or flight. Once their emotions are triggered, their adrenaline is running in hyperdrive and needs to be discharged. So it is extremely difficult for the 468 Tritype® to slow down and delay reacting.

One of the best ways I have learned to help the 468s achieve a sense of equanimity or emotional balance is to know when to tell the truth and when not to.

The 468s see things in black and white. It helps if they can learn to see the value of gray. They are highly emotional and intuitive. As a result, they see problems far in advance of others. If their concerns are not addressed, they continue to assert the merit of their concerns. In their attempt to convince others that their views are accurate, they can alienate others. Teaching the 468 how to communicate their concerns without alienating others is paramount.

Unbeknownst to the 468 is their need for others to act on their concerns in order for them to feel safe. They secretly feel disempowered and emotionally dependent on others. What they have not recognized is that they can validate their concerns even if others do not. In a sense, they can become their own trusted authority. They can acknowledge the part of themselves that is feeling panic and learn how to self-soothe regardless of what others are doing. When they can identify and acknowledge their fears and validate their concerns, they will feel less of a need for others to act in accordance with their concerns. When they act as their own agent, their feelings of intensity and immediate action will begin to slow down.

The 468s are meant to sound the alarm. They are the most emotionally intense Tritype®. They are not trying to be too much, they are trying to protect those in their world. We need these fierce protectors. A good rule of thumb is to remember that even though they have 8 in the Tritype®, they have trouble self-soothing. They need to learn how to internalize their own trusted authority to let go of their need to convince others of their viewpoint. When triggered, they are in red alert and are asking to be heard and validated so that they can calm down. Remember that no matter how much the 468s are over-reacting, there is always some truth in what they are saying. Also remember that what the 468s are saying is that they need to know that you have heard them and have validated their concerns. Most of all, they are saying that they need your help to restore a sense of inner calm. If you can help them to remember to have faith in whatever happens, they will find their own sense of equanimity.

468s tend to see their fears in exaggerated ways; large, loud and looming, and in vivid color. This intensity of the senses helps the 468s react in an emergency, but when there is no real imminent danger, this intensity causes the 468s to feel panic and distress. 468s can learn to recognize the beginning signs of being on guard. They can learn to feel their muscles tighten, their eyes widen, their jaw lock, and their hands roll into a fist. Physical alertness can warn them that they are ready and poised to act. They can then learn how to interfere with this primal response to stimuli and use strategies to minimize the intensity of the reaction by shrinking the images, fading the intensity of the colors of the images, turn down the volume that says act now and slow their pulse. Conscious attention to these innate impulses can reduce the level of their reactivity.

Transformation through Insight

Intellectual understanding of their process can help the 468s before their impulses are on red alert. They can learn to appreciate why they feel the way they do, as well as why it is not always in their best interest to act on their impulses. Like all Tritypes® with 8, they can remember that ‘their’ truth is not always ‘the’ truth. And, that knowing their truth, even if they are right, does not mean that they have to immediately tell people their truth all the time. They can learn to recognize that they will feel far more empowered and serve the greater good when they discover when it is better not to speak their truth.

The 468 needs to remember that not everyone sees or responds to the threats they perceive in the same manner... that the other Tritypes’ responses are also important biological imperatives. And, that the other Tritypes do not feel the same sense of urgency over the same issues because they are tracking different imperatives.

468s benefit from remembering that it takes all types. And that another’s lack of emotional response may be the diversity required to have a balanced and more satisfactory outcome to a problem. It is also helpful for the 468 to remember that others have their own life journey and may need to make their own mistakes to learn what is important. Most people know when they have made a mistake and/or overreacted and do not need anyone to remind them.

When the 468s learn that their view of reality, while valid, does not mean it will be the reality of others, they will begin to feel more at ease with others’ lack of reactivity. When they can accept these different views of reality they will be able to accept the lessons that are frustrating to 'Truth Tellers' such as patience. Even though they see things with such intense clarity, it is often not their duty to call it off. Sometimes the 259 Tritype® that says “wait and see” might reveal additional information that may be more effective in the long run.

Self-Inquiry

The most important question ‘truth tellers’ can ask themselves is—“What is my emotional need?” “What is my underlying motive for 'warning' others, and why do I need them to agree with my point of view in order to relax?”

Reflection

468s sincerely believe that they are voicing what others should know and do. Upon reflection, the 468s can identify the fears they were experiencing when they dramatically expressed their views, and/or had an emotional outburst. They can then examine the situation with fresh eyes rather than trying to convince others of their viewpoint. Reemphasizing their initial concerns is a clue that the 468s are still in fear and are not letting go. With insight, they can learn to accept the outcome following an emotional situation by tending to their own unmet needs that they disowned. With acceptance and ease in relating, like the natural state of the 279, they can begin to feel comfortable regardless of whether others agree with them.

Instead of continuing to press others to validate their point of view, 468s can learn to self-soothe by trusting what is. When the 468 comes from a place of essence, they no longer require others to see what they see and will not feel distress when others do not see the circumstances in the same way. They will be able to experience other people's lack of action as simply a truth of a different bias. They will be able to let go, even though it may seem 'counter-intuitive' to a truth teller.

Dominant type leading the 468

648 & 684: These Tritypes® with type 6 leading are paradoxical. Ironically, the 6s with this Tritype® are the most hyper-reactive 6, but they are still tentative and apprehensive. Their mental projections can make their reactions very confusing to others. They may at times show their anxiety and look timid and in need of support, and at other times they can be so intensely assertive and provocative that their needs go unseen. The high side of these Tritypes® is that they are extremely devoted and dutiful to those to whom they are attached. They are very loyal and protective.

468 & 486: These Tritypes® with type 4 leading are the most emotionally intense of all the Tritypes®. The 4 'passion for protest' with the 6 doubt and the fear of being misled combined with the 8 fear of being powerless makes these 4s appear very 8ish. They are very sensitive and emotional, but are also extremely expressive and argumentative. These 4s have powerful emotions and a great need to express themselves, which is why they can appear even more volatile and aggressive than most 8s. They are fiercely loyal and lovingly protective of those to whom they are attached.

864 & 846: These Tritypes® with type 8 leading are very intense and definitive. Ironically, these Tritypes® with 8 leading are softer than the 4 and 6 with this Tritype®. The 4's emotional sensitivity and the 6's need to engage cause these 8s to demonstrate fierce devotion as well as fierce opposition. These 8s are very outspoken and easily call off their truth. They are quick to anger, but are just as quick to get over it. Due to the 4 in these Tritypes®, these 8s are more tenderhearted and emotionally sensitive and available than say the 863 that is more driven to succeed by not expressing the emotions that can slow the 8 down.

General Profile: Brutally honest and emotionally turbulent, this can be an intimidating type to deal with. Regardless of what may be going on around them, you can bet that they have an opinion and few reservations about expressing it. This type can often have obsessive and subversive tendencies. They are rebellious and distrustful of "the system." At the same time, they have a high degree of loyalty and responsibility to causes, particularly those which affect or resonate with them personally. They are often champions of the underdog in a big way. They can have a reputation for being rude or dramatic, but without such individuals, society would fall into mechanical complacency. Furthermore, they can make effective, if radical, social activists. They are not afraid of a little chaos if it benefits the greater good. Because their emotions are so intense, some individuals of this tritype may feel as if their emotions are not entirely their own and thus need to express them to others.

If Core 4: The most outspoken 4. They are often drawn to dark, edgy, "tough"-looking fashion styles. They create subversive art that depicts the darker side of society, presenting mundane ills in a striking and dramatic way. They are deeply resentful of excessive social niceties or anything they perceive as "phony" or a distraction from the harsher realities of life. They may lash out at friends in the name of tough love or appeal to others' sympathy in order to maintain alliances. They are capable of finding strength in hardship and victimhood.

[Likeliest instinctual variant: sp/sx]

If Core 6: The most rebellious 6. While loyal, their allegiance is primarily to the cause rather than any individuals involved. They are quick to point out flaws in systems and ideologies, particularly if they or others are victimized or injured by said things. Despite being defensive and overprotective, they are prone to very reckless behavior, either to burn off nervous energy or to keep themselves pumped up. If they can harness the more extreme aspects of their emotions, they can make excellent motivational speakers and advocates.

[Likeliest instinctual variant: so/sx]

If Core 8: The most vulnerable 8. Most 8s would prefer not to admit feeling dejected or afraid, but since 846/864 knows little of subtlety, these feelings surface in an easily observable way more often than they would like. In leadership situations, they can be territorial and suspicious of their subordinates. On the upside, they go to great lengths to avoid “shady” or dishonest dealings. When they sense danger, they are prone to withdrawing and lashing out. It is essential for this sort of 8 to have a trusted confidant, despite their preference for absolute independence. They need to learn that accepting help is not surrender—it is their first line of defense against being defeated by their own intense emotions.

[Likeliest instinctual variant: sx/so]

Likely MBTI Types: ISFP, ESFP, and ISTP.

The 468 and 478 Tritypes® have a driving and essential need for depth, meaning, and transformation according to their sense of truth...

468 Personal Expression is the leading passion of choice

The 4 with the 468 Tritype® is the stronger type 4 that feels their sense of worth, while still feeling vulnerable, sensitive, uncertain, and in need of reassurance. The three adrenaline types combined with the need for personal expression, which means the 468 will need to discharge intense emotions within 3-5 minutes, usually sooner. Their need to express their sense of truth is immediate...or at the very least within 5 minutes.

We are angry and experience very deep feelings towards things and people. We always speak our minds and often get into trouble because we are so honest. We get very angry, trash the place up, then deeply regret it afterward and feel like completely different people. Other people say we are “crybabies”, “drama queens” or having “hissy fits” and it offends us. Whenever someone tells us what to do, especially without a logical reason, we get furious and get into even more trouble because we are punished for showing our emotions. As minors, adults may tell us things like “The world doesn't revolve around you”, “You can't have everything in life” or “I don't like being told what to do either” and sentences like these make us angry. As minors, we rebel against our parents, but easily get caught and have more restrictions placed on us.

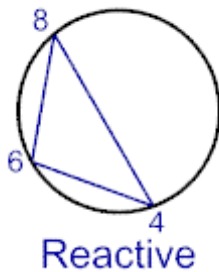

Now we're going to uncover what the Reactive Group (numbers 4, 6, and 8) tends to do when things don't go their way. People in the Reactive Group often respond to difficulty by reacting first with their emotions. They typically have strong feelings and opinions about things and want the people around them to feel the same way they do when things go wrong.

When Enneagram 4 is dealing with difficulty or an uncomfortable emotion, they want people to understand and empathize with them. They don't hide their feelings, but instead look for someone to see their pain, identify with their pain, and help take care of it.

For Enneagram 6, uncomfortable situations bring out their anxiety. They wonder if they can handle the emotions that are coming up. Some 6s will react defensively and put their guard up, while others will sink back and seek the support of someone who will go to battle for them.

When an Enneagram 8 is faced with difficulty, they want their feelings and opinions known. Often responding with anger, they need other people to see the injustice in a situation. Eights will try to take the lead in uncomfortable situations so that they can control the outcome.

The Reactive Approach (Types 4,6,8)

People whose dominant Harmonic approach is the reactive approach are emotionally reactive under stress. They tend to work themselves up when a problem happens and have a hard time containing their feelings. This emotional intensity allows them to feel the “realness” of the problem, even if it is a relatively small one. Venting their frustration allows them to move on to dealing with the issue. Wanting others to see the realness of the problem, they expect others to react emotionally. Such a reaction would confirm that others agree that indeed this is a big deal. If others don't respond in the way the Reactive approach types want, they may become even more frustrated and emotional.

The Reactive approach is not naturally trusting of others. They have strong opinions and tastes and want to know where others stand.

Their desire for a strong emotional response from others may be a test of trust.

Reactivity of Fours

Fours can get into conflicts by being overly moody, temperamental, and self-absorbed. Fours tend to have (over-) dramatic reactions to problems. They need to process and internalize their experiences. Identity and emotional reactions are highly intertwined in a Four. Fours tend to withdraw into their imagination, where problems often escalate into feelings of despair and hopelessness. Fours want to be emotionally open with and trust others, but more so with very close people. Their emotional guard is down so they can let others in.

Reactivity of Sixes

Sixes can get into conflict by being too pessimistic, suspicious, and doubtful. Sixes tend to be very anxious people. They are always on the watch for dangers and threats. When conflicts or threats occur, their anxiety comes out, often as long rants, hysterical overreactions, and feelings of inferiority. Sixes want to trust others (and others often put their faith in Sixes), but remain wary of problems. Sometimes they let their guard down (when within the confines of the authority/belief). Other times, they keep their guard up to ensure that others do not take advantage of them.

Reactivity of Eights

Eights can get into conflict by being too willful, defiant, and confrontational. Eights tend to not censor their own impulses or emotional reactions. Eights want to feel the realness of conflict to give themselves a stronger sense of being. When conflicts occur, Eights are very quick to challenge and confront them. Eights keep their guard up all the time and want to minimize their dependence on (and trust in) others. They do not want others to see their vulnerable side.

The Reactive Group - Types 4, 6, and 8: The types in this group respond emotionally to conflicts and problems, and have difficulties knowing how much to trust others. They also tend to have issues with seeking support versus independence: Fours seek advice, direction, and support, Eights defy or rebel against advice, direction and support, and Sixes go back and forth (wanting at times to be both supported and at times to be independent).

The Reactive Group consists of enneagram types 4, 6, and 8.

The Reactive Group is also sometimes called the Emotional Realness group or Intensity group. Each of these types have strong reactions (and needs reactions from others) when faced with disappointment and/or conflict, but it is shown in their own reactive ways.

Type 4s in the Reactive Group

4s react by withdrawing and seek a supporter (someone to understand them). They fear abandonment and that they won't have enough support to find themselves. 4s deal with others by keeping them interested by limiting access (playing hard to get).

Type 6s in the Reactive Group

6s react by assessing people/situations and seek independence and support (someone to rely on, but they also want to be the strong one). They fear abandonment, being without support, and becoming too dependent. 6s deal with others by being committed and reliable; staying engaged by being defensive.

Type 8s in the Reactive Group

8s react by openly expressing anger and seek independence and self-reliance. They fear being controlled and dominated, and fear being vulnerable. 8s deal with others by keeping their guard up and toughening themselves against pain.

Advice for the Reactive Group

Be aware that as reactive types, you tend to overemphasize your emotions. Realize that how much you display your emotions & frustrations can deeply impact others. Drawing on the strengths of the competency and positive outlook groups can help you with the best outcome.

Emotional Realness - Types 4, 6, 8

Obstacles and problems evoke within us an emotional response, and it is the reaction that the Emotional Realness types will focus in on. They express their reactions openly and in doing so, look for emotional mirroring within others, gaining knowledge of where others stand on issues. Type 8 openly expresses anger, often feeling energized by conflict. Type 4 takes a more withdrawn approach to their reaction, typically in an artistic or symbolic form. Type 6 is more selective in its reaction, using the emotional release as a way of assessing people or situations.

The Emotional Realness reaction is probably the least supported by the western world, which values rationality and emotional repression. This isn't to say these types are not good. On the contrary, the Emotional Realness types are probably best at working through their emotions as well as those expressed by others. It is just a matter of not over doing it, of being aware of how venting your own frustrations can significantly impact others.

Reactive - 468

Emotionally reactive under stress, hard time containing their feelings, need you to see the problem that they can see, pointing out the “bad” thing

4: Reacts in self-absorption and amplification of inner states, feelings of hatred fuelled by inadequacy, expressing negativity is “authenticity”

6: Reacts in outspoken combat, standing up for what they believe, drawing attention to anything that feels wrong or dangerous, emotionally moody, anxiety

8: Reacts in force, untethered anger and denial of vulnerability

The Emotional Realness Triad (Enneagram types 4, 6, and 8) brings emotions to the forefront in times of change. These types naturally use the strategy of digging up truths about where they and others stand and what problems they're dealing with. Seeking to get to the bottom of things, they may be the first to recognize when a change is needed, and to deal with the messy emotional realities that it involves. Emotional realness types can draw on the strategies of the other two triads to strategize and contextualize changes.

THE REACTIVE GROUP

TYPES 4, 6, AND 8

This group deals with conflict or difficulty by reacting emotionally, and they expect an emotional response in return, so they can know where others stand. Each of the three types in the Reactive Group has issues around trusting other people.

- 4s tend to feel like they're on the outside to begin with and are very sensitive to slights and perceived slights (lack of support). They are easily hurt.
- 6s want to be seen as strong and reliable, but at the same time, they want to feel supported by others. They can get defensive.
- 8s are comfortable in the supportive role, but they don't want to need other people, so they keep their guard up to prevent others from getting too close. They are easily angered.

Types 4, 6, & 8 are in the Reactive group and they have strong reactions when faced with conflict and want others to have strong reactions.

469 – The Seeker Archetype

469/496: Inquisitive and accepting 4. This is the most sensitive and doubting 4, especially if a social subtype. This 4 is focused on the mysteries of life and seeks truth. This 4 can be insecure and doubt themselves. They will seek multiple resources to be certain. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

649/694: Accepting and intuitive 6. This is the most emotional and accommodating 6. This 6 has the most self-doubt and uncertainty and often seeks multiple sources of confirmation before making a decision. Very sensitive, and can be mistaken for a 4 or 2. The core fears are of fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, chaos, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, and being abandoned.

946/964: Intuitive and inquisitive 9. This 9 is a true seeker and is very philosophical. This 9 is most inclined to hesitate due to feelings of doubt and uncertainty. This is the creative, gentle, and sensitive 9 that can be passive or overactive. This 9 is moody and can run on high anxiety. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, fear itself, danger, being alone, cowardice, submitting, deviance, uncertainty, being targeted, and chaos.

Emotional Expression

- 469s are more doubtful and unsure of themselves. They express their concern for their own ability to assert change and to be faithful to their own values;

Activity

- 469s are very hesitant and careful with what they choose to do, since they are unsure of the right way to do things and how it can affect the overall harmony of their environment;

Dealing with Own Anxiety

- 469s can linger on their doubts for too long at times, preventing them from effectively knowing what's best for them. However, that can also work very well when focusing on the essential questions to be solved;

Energy Levels

- 469s are kind of in between 459 and 479; while they don't like making the first move around people, they can join in once they trust the group;

Reaction to Change

- 469s are the most openly fearful of changes in their environment, as they are good at honing into potential dangers and inconsistent behaviors; they need reassurance and outside help when dealing with big changes;

Routine

- 469s usually like routine the most compared to 468 and 146. They feel at ease within moderately firm boundaries that allow them to follow a predetermined schedule but also allows for personal creativity and exploration (especially true for core FOURs and SIX wing SEVEN);

General Behavior

- 469s are more visibly anxious and unsure about themselves and their environment. They, like 459s, can look shy and wait for others to be included, but generally displays a more friendly and approachable attitude. The warmest subtype with this archetype is probably Self-Pres, which can look very submissive and timid at first;

Extraversion & Energy Levels

- 469s are one of the most introverted tritypes and consequently are less likely to be assertive than 369s or concerned about helping others like 269s;

Anxiety Triggers

- 469s are the most outwardly anxious of all SIX+NINE combinations. Their nervousness increases when they realize that searching for truth ultimately leads to more questions;

Aggressiveness

- 469s also have a lot of problems properly venting their frustrations and can quickly resort to passive-aggressiveness when things don't go as planned;

Potential Problems

- This tritype has many self-confidence problems. They may often feel as though they need help from others, but that they are unable to get it. They fight between needing others and striving for seclusion. The 469 is the most doubting tritype regardless which type is in charge. It is also the tritype that most struggles with a constant sense of self. They can also be somewhat passive. The only tritype that's more passive is the 269. The 269 is happier in presentation.

Patterns & Structure

- 469s are triple Doubting. This means that this archetype has all 3 enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to reflect on what they have learned in order to make a statement. As such, they are constantly weighing concepts back and forth in their head in order to come to a trustworthy conclusion, but usually feel that there are always more questions than accurate answers.

Those qualities are enhanced with a Social subtype since they are more likely to share those insecurities within a group setting and want to come to a consensus compared to other subtypes.

Sexual subtypes are less prone to wallow into constant questioning and prefer to look for actual answers outside their heads.

Self-Preservation dominant types can be insecure about change and wants stability the most. SP subtypes aren't the ones to push boundaries of any kind;

Interests:

- finding meaning and truth
- solving conflict

Mission:

- thinking about how to make life meaningful and helping others find meaning

Blind spot:

- overly focused on doing the right things, therefore being afraid to make decisions

Fears:

- failure
- making the wrong decision
- conflict

If you are a 469, you are intuitive, inquisitive, and accepting. You want to be original, certain, and peaceful. You are very sensitive and can easily feel reserved and inhibited. Furthermore, you struggle with intense feelings of self-doubt and uncertainty. As a result, you need multiple sources of confirmation. You want to be individualistic but can fear being separate from others, so avoid confrontation. You want to have your world peaceful, but will always be in search of understanding life's mysteries and will always continue seeking.

Your life mission is to raise the questions pertaining to the mysteries of life and share your findings with others. A true seeker, you are happiest when you feel you can answer the question of who you are. You can be so focused on your feelings, insecurities, and doubts that you can feel paralyzed by the fear of making the wrong decision and of being misled or duped. The 469 is a seeker with a lot of self-doubt. There is always more to learn when you are this tritype, but the desire is to develop a philosophy. The Seeker deals with great anxiety, the most doubting tritype. It is also the tritype that most struggles with a constant sense of self. They can also be somewhat passive. They are intuitive, inquisitive, and driven to understand as much about themselves and others as possible. These people are worriers and are afraid of being wrong or being in danger. Scans for rejection, conflict, and inclusion/exclusion. They are emotionally accommodating of others and comforting. They ponder, think, and rethink in a worrying skeptical manner.

I feel personally as though 469s, despite common stereotypes portraying them as sensitive children left tortured and bruised by the sorrows of their day-to-day choices, are rather perfectionistic, active, and intelligent (in both an academic and emotional sense); they are intensely (and carefully) private with the ones in whom they allow in, and are both courageously and romantically philosophical.

The stereotype of 469s being sheep-like in their decision-making is obviously based around a core of truth; uncertainty and self-doubt is often present in the lives of many 469s, regardless of choice. I found that in my personal case, however, I rather enjoyed making my decisions on my own watch, after taking in different perspectives for the purpose of diversification. Listening to others wasn't simply a reaction spurred by the terror of the unknown or the fear of my own intelligence (or rather, the lack of it), but rather an effort to make a decision that would be most fitting and advantageous.

I suppose that I may be getting a bit wordy here; it just pisses me off to read how complacent and pathetic 469s seem to be featured in popular web 'takes'. I've personally found fellow 469s to be incessantly dutiful, intellectual, and brave; they stand up for what they believe in, have the ability to summon up the courage to rally large crowds for various causes, and are thorough and fearless in their work for others.

As careful and measured as they may at times seem, the sensitivity present in 469s is no less of an asset than it is in any other tritype; it allows for great empathy, compassion, loyalty, and deep friendships with those they care about. While their ever-present shame and anxiety of existence may, at times, be agonizing and relentless, it also can provoke great artistic expression and self-understanding; as a 4, I am, albeit at the risk of stereotype, quite fond of my melancholy as it allows me to work at my best state.

You guys ever get involved in anything social and immediately start to become self-aware of it. Then you start to socially withdraw because you start thinking to yourself, "do I even belong with these people?"

The 9 fix by contrast tends to allow 6 to stay longer in a state of questioning ambivalence. 6 still wants to find a structure/truth, but 9 allows more back and forth. Both 6 and 9 have trouble being solid. With 6+9's, one might get the sense that they're playing with ideas rather than how the 6+1 insists on finding one specific outcome. The 6+9 might settle on an outcome, but spend more time re-questioning and vacillating. 9 as a withdrawn energy pulls the 6 fix into a place where it needs permission to exist fully and trust itself.

This tritype is so conflicting...there's always this sense of wanting to have your own, separate identity, but at the same time, there's also this urge to just...merge with a group or person. And don't even get me started on the self-doubt, LOL.

The 469 is a seeker with a lot of self-doubt. There is always more to learn when you are this tritype, but the desire is to develop a philosophy. The 6 and 4 have the most self-doubt, along with the 9. The 4 doubts their feelings, the 6 their thoughts. 6s want reassurance, 4s want praise to offset their natural tendency to be shame sensitive. The 4 leading is more concerned with the "Who am I?" question and hopes to 'someday' have that answered through constant introspection and referencing their own feelings. I can only speak from my own lens and say that the 6 leading is less identity focused. "Who Am I" doesn't enter the picture like the 4, and there's less reliance on needing to set themselves apart to resolve the philosophical dilemma.

...the 6 will stereotypically give 469 some sort of orientation around associations to ease anxiety...469 will have more of a push-pull reaction pattern with authority in staving off inner anxiety.

This will often explain why non 6s that are not self-preserving wonder why they run high anxiety. The 469 tritype has the 3 types that feel doubt. Doubt breeds insecurity, which increases anxiety. The gift of this tritype is the ability to search for meaning. What begins as doubt ultimately brings a great deal of knowledge that can lead to greater understanding.

Tritype Profiles: The Seeker

Shared Trait: Triple Self-doubting

Fixes: 4, 6, 9 (in any order)

General Profile: This is one of the most vulnerable and soft-mannered tritypes. They often struggle with issues of identity and where they fit in. They are highly sensitive to the reactions and behavior of others which may make them difficult to get close to, but usually also makes them highly considerate of where others are coming from. Likewise, they can have difficulty standing up for themselves without dramatic or passive-aggressive behavior, though they are quick to support others in a gentle and loving way when those others are mistreated. They tend to have a whimsical and innocent air about them which belies a deep gravity inside of them—the weight of the never-ending search for truth. Many of these individuals have difficulty expressing themselves in a direct or pragmatic way, preferring to use imagery and abstract concepts. This tritype is over-represented among poets.

If Core 9: The most emotional 9. They are less outwardly calm, but nonetheless make their desire for a secure and harmonious environment known. They often experience or express a disconnect between the self and the emotions, portraying them in more indirect ways—it is catharsis rather than the expression of something stable. Like Type 4, they use their imaginative faculties to form and maintain a sense of self. Like many 9s, they are spiritual, but they may find spiritual inspiration in unconventional and unexpected venues such as literature.

The sx 469s want the security that comes with a trusted relationship. Grief can feel overwhelming and many have shared feeling flooded. They also report that grief brings up fear.

Both the 469 and 269 tend to be passive. The 269 is more ingratiating. The 469 is more aloof.

The 468 reacts and rings the alarm to prevent making a mistake to calm down, and the 469 doubts and procrastinates to avoid making a mistake...to calm down.

The 469 is very gentle unless threatened. They are very out of touch with their gut! The struggle is with doubt and inaction.

946: I maintain an easy-going front and tend to forget how I feel and my problems when I think that my problems aren't as big as others, which prevents me from speaking out. I'm also more like a sloth more than anything. I have troubles with conflict; not just like fighting for myself, it's also the simple things like replying to simple texts from others that won't induce any type of real conflict. It's not because I'm scared, but I'm just a sloth.

9s fear being in conflict. 479 vs 469. Look at the level of confidence and optimism. The 7 brings a light touch with magical thinking, hoping for the best. In contrast, the 6 brings support and loyalty. Both are highly intuitive, but the 469 has more doubts. The 479 is more future oriented, focusing on the possibilities. The 469 is more dutiful with a heavier heart, fearing that they can't make enough of a difference.

469s report a fear of making the wrong decision and then having feelings of painful self consciousness and shame for having done so, but also for not making a decision.

Any combination that has a 6 runs anxiety. Any tritype that has self-pres as the dominant instinct is motivated by anxiety. The tritypes that tend to run high anxiety are the 614 and 694...and then 629 and 639.

If 6 is dominant in the 469 tritype, there are more obvious fears and concerns. However, 946 and 469 are equally troubled by insecurities.

All 3 types have a little paralysis through analysis. And all 3 hate conflict. The 469 experiences extreme self-doubt and hesitates more than other 4s. It is a shy 4, but they do have their own opinions...they are just reluctant to voice them. The 649 has the greatest difficulty trusting their own thoughts and tends to seek multiple confirmations before making decisions. The 964 is plagued with indecision too and can look like a 6, but they are not as inclined to seek opinions from others. They just avoid the conflict, hoping it will resolve itself.

Regarding doubt for the 469: I think Katherine said that the 4 has self-doubt, the 6 doubts themselves and others, and the 9 has the believer/doubter dichotomy.

The 649 (or 469 or 964) want peace, harmony, and gentleness. They are sensitive and doesn't know what to trust, and in particular doesn't know what to trust in themselves. She stated that the 6 is more often than not phobic and needs multiple sources of confirmation and information. They don't feel they can rebound from emotional pain, so they tend to avoid it through the questioning process and end up finding more questions.

469 is going to have more difficulty being separate from others. More shame and anxiety about being different. There would be more checking in with others.

(4)-6-9 : The Normative 4

4-(6)-9 : The Withdrawn 6

4-6-(9) : The Reactive 9

9 and 6 both accommodate others. 9 to prevent conflict and achieve external peace, and 6 to maintain a support system and prevent others from abandoning them

6-4-9: Accepting and intuitive, most emotional and passive, can think they are a 2 or a sexual subtype. Most doubting 6.

9 = passivity and inaction

4 = shame and frustration for what you are

What is the positive side of being an 964? Answer→ 9 is peaceful and agreeable, often getting along with a lot of people. 6 is committed, loyal, and responsible, people oriented. 4 is individualistic and self-aware, and typically creative and imaginative.

946: Intuitive and inquisitive 9. Most inclined to hesitate and feel doubt and uncertainty. Most gentle, passive 9. High anxiety.

When the 4 and 6 are in the tritype, there is more negativity as a strategy to prevent making a mistake that will bring shame, blame, and criticism. This is most true of the 461 and then 468 and then the 469.

Anxiety and worry increase with the 1 and doubt and uncertainty with the 9. Examine your motivations rather than your behaviors. This is especially difficult for the 6, but more so for the 649 as all 3 types tend to doubt as a defense strategy. This is the Tritype that is most reluctant to take a stand for their “own” opinion until they are angry. The 641 has all 3 types that fear making a mistake and being at risk for having done so. They tend to be more likely to show frustration and to correct and instruct others (especially for the so 641).

The 694 is much more hidden and inhibited. The 641 is focused on the perfecting and refining...getting it right.

Both 4s and 6s can be emotional. The question is what are you emotional about? In terms of difficult behaviors...

6s identify a source to prove

4s identify a source to impress

649 doubting, insecure

I'm 649 too...some days 469, and some 964

My mind automatically scans for rejection, conflict, and inclusion/exclusion, whenever I'm focusing on me (for example putting myself 'out there' with my music—which is my absolute heart and soul). Whenever my self and esteem and worth is on the line, whenever I've made a personal effort to engage or simply self-express to others, I'm basically a wreck.

However, if attention is not on me, I'm fine...often one with nature, internalizing the world, being receptive and in touch with my inner self, entertaining myself with my mind, desires, and fantasy. I can do that in my own privacy and on my own terms, and I'm happy to not need others. But I'm too often pulled to find myself in the world (and show myself to it) to stay isolated for long. I can (and often do) get passive and can let a lot of years go by spinning on the same impracticalities, not really pushing myself out there for fear of rejection and not being what I envision myself to be (wish to be). I have a lot of 'go along' energy that I fall back on when I need emotional and psychic rest.

I think my tritype is 469. It particularly plays itself out in the social realm via shame, feeling utterly different, feeling hunted when very insecure (with no real external evidence to back the feeling up) and then by succumbing to a desire to merge with the group by lying down and playing 'dead' like a puppy. The merging brings short-term relief until my need to express myself takes over. If I can't, I feel sickened by my lack of authenticity. If I can, I do, which opens me up to feeling exposed and ashamed again, so I withdraw to avoid feeling hunted.

My 6 wants to find confidence and assurance, my 9 wants everyone to get along and have fun, and my 4 wants to find something special that no one else has done.

Triple Low-Self Esteem lol

The sx with 4 brings emotional intensity and a need for closeness with desired intimates...and, there is anger if intimacy is thwarted or denied. The 468 is impulsive and highly reactive... the focus is on immediate resolution. The 469 feels a great deal of doubt and in general is not as reactive. There is more of a tendency to hesitate, plan and prepare with more anxiety.

The 469 is more phobic than the 468.

468 and 469 come across as very different because the 8 in the 486 makes the 6 counter-phobic and therefore comes across as more aggressive. The 469 comes across as more passive-aggressive.

The 649 ponders...thinks and rethinks. They are introspective like the 459...just more people oriented. Their shame is in making a mistake...they must get it right like the 461, but do not feel that they can easily say their opinion out loud due to a fear that they might make a mistake.

As 4 is dominant, in addition to seeing themselves as intuitive and deep with a need for beauty and aesthetics, the 479s see themselves as loving, innovative, and gentle, while the 468 as intense and iconoclastic, and the 469 as thoughtful and introspective.

This tritype is more withdrawn and introverted, due to 9 and 4. Somewhat anxious but fairly friendly though quiet, considering, thoughtful, and hesitant. Very in their head. Peaceful. Introspective, ruminating. Wants to know how they fit into the world. Deep capability for feeling and thinking about what they are feeling. Self-conscious. Less impulsive as they're caught up on not making a mistake, thinks thoroughly before acting but will sometimes hesitate too much and be too passive. Torn between inaction and upsetting people by possible actions. Somewhat self-conscious. Seeks (credible) advice. More phobic. Though they are introspective, do seek people out. Feel left out because of their differences and would like to "blend in" lest their differences cause problems sometimes.

The 469 tritype, often referred to as the "Seeker" or "Intuitive Explorer," embodies a compelling combination of the introspective and emotionally intense 4, the vigilant and loyal 6, and the harmonious and peace-seeking 9. This archetype is marked by a profound longing for authenticity, self-awareness, and stability, alongside a relentless pursuit of meaning and identity. Although they grapple with heightened emotions, self-doubt, and anxiety, their introspective nature ultimately leads to personal growth and a deeper understanding of themselves and the world.

In contrast, the 496 subtype rearranges the enneatypes' priorities, maintaining the focus on authenticity and depth (4), placing emphasis on conflict avoidance and attentiveness to others' needs (9), and accentuating loyalty and responsibility (6). This subtle shift in prioritization yields a unique dynamic that balances individuality, harmony, and loyalty while preserving the core essence of the Intuitive Explorer archetype.

Through a more nuanced lens, individuals with the 496 subtype seamlessly interweave their emotional intensity and creativity (4), their harmonious disposition and conflict mediation skills (9), and their unwavering commitment and sense of responsibility (6). By integrating these facets, they gracefully navigate the intricacies of their inner world and interpersonal relationships, fostering profound connections with both themselves and others.

A comprehensive analysis of the tritypes reveals that both the 469 and 496 share the core essence of the Intuitive Explorer archetype while manifesting subtle differences in prioritization and emphasis. By embracing these intricacies, individuals with these tritypes can harness their unique amalgamation of introspection, sensitivity, and curiosity to traverse a rich and meaningful life.

Through self-awareness, self-compassion, and courageous confrontation of their fears and insecurities, these individuals possess the potential to forge deep connections, foster personal growth, and leave a lasting impact on the world around them. Furthermore, considering the sexual, self-preservation, and social subtypes within the 469 and 496 tritypes adds another layer of complexity, influencing how individuals with these tritypes express their passions, focus on security, and engage with their communities.

In conclusion, a comprehensive understanding of the 469 and 496 tritypes and their subtypes offers valuable insights into the rich tapestry of human experience, shedding light on the diverse ways people perceive and navigate the world. As a psychologist examining the depth and intricacies of the human psyche, recognizing these variations and their interplay can inform therapeutic approaches, empowering individuals to harness their strengths, confront their vulnerabilities, and ultimately live more authentic, meaningful lives.

“146, 468, and 469 all share a hypersensitivity to negative feedback, whether it's blame, shame, or judgement. Criticism is taken directly personally (4) and responded with some degree of emotional reactivity (6). Katharine Faurve made an amusing analogy of 4s: while most people would try to avoid arrows being shot at them, a 4 would actually catch an arrow flying at them and use it to stab themselves. This imagery pretty much depicts how criticism is received.”

I doubt everything about myself (literally everything up to my favorite color ...although I am almost sure it's purple... it might be magenta). I feel like other people are more sure than I am. Ever since forever, I am constantly seeking answers of some sort. I was always interested in things that were not ordinary and would befriend people who represented a different side of life (nothing really extreme ...just people who were different from me). I sought answers by studying genetics, the endocrine system, and many other things, as it could potentially tie into emotions and psychological experiences. Now I seek answers differently. But as times moves forward, I am spending more and more...and even more time trying to understand not just psychological experiences and emotions, but my own.

Funny, I trust my own opinion more than anyone else, but I don't trust me to know myself. I am always seeking answers to questions, most of which no one else would even consider. I doubt my motives and actions. I constantly wonder what I could be doing more. I always wonder about others and why they do what they do.

I find I am at my best when I stop questioning and just doing. Everyone believes in me, why shouldn't I? If they feel I can conquer every obstacle, overcome every issue, and achieve every goal, maybe I can.

But then I doubt.....is that the right direction? Is that what I really want? Is it worth the cost?

(Replying to above) Yeah, it's important to stop questioning as often as we do. Just live life. There isn't actually an answer; there is only you doing what feels right to you, so that means getting to know yourself and what's in the world, so you can find what is best for you. For me, the hardest part is the possibility that who I am at my core can change. I put so much effort into understanding myself and define 'me' ...that it would be the most confusing thing in the world if I was no longer "me".

Oh, I didn't mean to say that I trust other people more than myself or that I trust myself more than others (although I absolutely hate it when a person steers me in a direction that isn't what I want. Even for simple things like buying a pair of glasses, lol). What I mean is that I can see the essence of everyone else, but me (cue the lykke li song, lol).

Actually, as I think about it, although trust does play a large role, my issue is more about being held back than it is about trust. There are too many voices in my head telling me "no" ...and that is no fun, lol.

Trust, in the traditional sense, is not that big of a deal for me. I don't rely on an outside source like religion or the government or even just a regular group of friends to make me feel secure. So, I am not sure if I understand what you mean when you say you trust yourself more than you trust others.

Maybe you mean that you don't trust people to help you live your own unique and meaningful life? If so, then I agree. I don't trust others all that much when it comes to who I am and what I want from life.

The easiest and most concise way of describing it, at least for how I see myself: I desire to be understood and liked by people I can trust, and I want everyone to get along. I find myself valuing approval of others and internal peace above most things, for better or worse. I've heard before that we're typically egalitarian and have exceptionally low patience for people who consider themselves better than us. That's definitely true for me.

I feel like I'm good at understanding others' true desires. I'm very much a peacemaker amongst my coworkers, who can be a little less tactful at times and more prone to misunderstandings or conflict because of that. I hate conflict, so I'm willing to jump into a conversation that's going southward and explain what each side is actually saying, if misunderstanding is the root of the conflict. People who refuse to adapt even a little to other people are probably one of my bigger frustrations.

At my worst, I can certainly find myself being very insecure and constantly looking for validation from people I trust on the big picture stuff I want to do with my life. In rough times, I find myself bouncing back and forth between wanting to do something uniquely me and not wanting to upset anyone I trust lest I have to stand alone and defend myself. That's probably my worst nightmare.

(Replying to above) Spot on! I'm a 946. The desire to be understood and liked is definitely a trait I feel, but it can be hard for me to determine who I can trust at first (6 being last probably doesn't help). Peace and harmony comes before anything, and I'm basically egalitarian. However, when someone upsets me, shows a poor work ethic, or has a general bad attitude, I can look down on them. I try to remind myself in these moments that everyone has faults, and these are no different, they just happen to be the kind of faults that get on my nerves.

I rarely see much conflict in my life, but I have a tendency to avoid it when I do. I just don't want anything to do with it. Later on, once things have died down, I will go to the people arguing and try to console them one on one (I am a Sx/Sp after all). I tend to start by recognizing their viewpoint as legitimate (even if I disagree with them) and try to explain the other person's argument tactfully.

I don't mind if people don't adapt to others so much, what I hate is when they are aggressive in a serious manner that leaves no room for any positive emotion. Aggression in a comical, sarcastic, or even nihilistic way I'm fine with. In fact, I generally am drawn to people who are "my type" of aggressive. I can often let my guard down and have a nice back and forth with people like this, which is extremely relieving because I barely ever let my guard down around others.

I seek validation, but I don't look for it from others actively. I'm more likely to do my own thing and risk alienating myself a bit in the process, but people generally don't mind, I guess it's because I'm nice. I know when I can bridge the gap and talk about something we both enjoy, show an interest in others, and be a good listener. This allows some leeway in being a little odd while simultaneously gaining favor with people.

(Replying to above) It's funny that you mention the aggressiveness thing... I'm attracted to people who are quick on their feet and I love bantering with them, but I'm very conscious of how they use it. People who do that to everyone as a rule without being aware of whom they're talking to eventually rub me the wrong way. It's because that approach eventually lands wrong with someone, and the people I've known like that usually respond to it with something like, "Huh. Dunno what their problem is. They need to get over themselves." Which... yeah, but also I feel like trying to understand your audience beforehand would have helped? Maybe that's my social variant talking. I love feeling as though I'm a part of a group, having some solid foundation of belonging, but it's hard for me to ever really feel like I fit in to the wider social sphere.

(Replying to above) These are all points that I have experienced. The desire to be liked, trusted and understood. In mediating, too, I tend to always be the one doing it. If I see someone and know they are feeling excluded or mad, I will make sure they feel included again. I have such deep values, but I won't express them if I know if I will be standing alone and hurting others. Even if a friend says something wrong about something, I won't tell them and if I feel it's better they know, I will make sure they don't feel dumb and try to create a compromise. So between not wanting to stand alone or correct every wrong, I know I'm not an 8 or 1. Anyway, thank you so much for your answer. I cannot express how much I related to it. And I really do empathize with you too because being such a deep trust-seeking peacemaker can feel so isolated, always trying not to lose grasp of harmony, acceptance, or yourself all at once.

I'm sexual/social 946. I'm intuitive, accepting, researching. I want to be special, I want to be peaceful.

I'm very sensitive. I feel intense feelings of self-doubt and insecurity. I need other persons to confirm my opinion before I can come out with my opinion.

I want to be individualistic, but I'm always afraid to be separated from others. I avoid confrontations, they ensure that my whole body starts to tremble... :-s

I find it very difficult to stand in my own strength. I am very sad when I'm being overlooked...

> My inner dialogue is like:

My 4 saying: There's something missing in me, I'm broken/defected from birth.

My 9 saying: It's better to narcotize/numb myself to reach inner harmony.

My 6 saying: If I lose my guidance, I'll fall into the void.

I'm extremely self-doubting, which makes other people doubt me, which just makes me doubt myself even more, and it becomes a vicious cycle.

I think it's because I was given the message as a kid that I couldn't rely on myself or truly trust myself, and that it was better if I just let the people who knew what they were doing handle things. I don't think anyone explicitly told me this, but any time I tried to take charge or do something for myself it usually backfired, and I felt more like a failure and a burden than if I just let someone else handle the problem.

As you can probably imagine, this mindset hasn't served me very well in adulthood, lol. I'm trying to get past it, but I already feel so behind my peers that it just makes me depressed and want to try even less.

> After chatting in private with Katherine Fauvre for a while, she finally settled on my tritype being 469 instead of what I previously thought was 459 or 479.

I'm currently starting to come to terms with this idea because I realized that I've been resisting my sixness for a long time, even though when I look back on past experiences I can really see I unfold in countless situations.

Additionally, the idea of being triple doubt and analysis paralysis doesn't seem to feel very pleasant nor gratifying by any means. I often deemed this 469 tritype like the least desirable because of this. What's enviable about being constantly plagued by insecurities and second-guessing yourself for each little decision one might make in a day? This tritype feels way too sensitive and vulnerable and doesn't seem to bring much to the table, compared to its 459 and 479 brethren...anyway, sorry about my rant...I'm still a bit salty about being this tritype.

> I don't think there is a "worst" type to have so you are all good. I think every type is wonderful and have something special they can bring to this world. I can see why you would resist the 6, I think there's a stereotype going around with 6 being constantly anxious and worried, but there's so much more to the type 6 than just an anxiety tag. Type 6s are intellectual and they are technically thinker types, they are equally analytical and deep thinking as a type 5, If you are a 6 you have the 5 or 7 wing so you can see those 2 types show up sometimes to help your 6. I don't think there's anything bad about having a 6 in your tritype. Personality typing is more about seeking the most accurate answer because the goal of finding a personality type is to help you, and holding onto inaccurate information about yourself doesn't help you in any way (not saying there's no possibility of you being a 459 or 479). To answer your question of making the best out of it, I suggest learn more about the type and learn more about yourself, knowledge is power. Learn to be mindful and content, but not completely neglect your passions and true desire in life. There's a way for every type to be content and live a meaningful life.

> Today I found out I'm this tritype too. A 6 dominant on top of it. It made so much sense. I'm both relieved and upset: relieved because it's like I finally found something that can explain why I behave the way I do and am the way I am, but at the same time, all of it is what I hate the most about myself. Constant second guessing and the annoying habit of relying too much on external help, whether it is from friends or online sources because I just can't trust my own thoughts. The seeker name fits me perfectly honestly, for me, the thing I've always been seeking to find, since I was a child, is myself, who I am.

> Well I'm a 6w5>9w8>4w3. Maybe I'm just to a point in my life where I just shruggingly accept my indecision because its always been there. It is frustrating being so unsure all the time, but with time I've found enough strength in myself that though I don't completely trust myself, I still do generally trust myself more than anyone else on Earth. Though I am painfully unsure about a lot, I still know exactly who I am, and I would never trade my inner guidance for anyone's outside guidance. But sometimes I still do need help from important people in my life when their strengths regarding any particular issue in my life clearly outweigh mine. But I am always essentially the #1 executive guiding them to help me, rather than their executive decisions paving the road for me. Jeez, almost sounds like I'm kinda healthy. I guess maybe this is all possible for a 469 tritype. I even have a psychosis on top of all this. So Idk, maybe keep your chin up.

> I just realized one of my closest friends is the 469 tritype (6w5 core).

I appreciate her so much because she is a deep thinker and sensitive soul. She is one of the funniest people I know with a nuanced sense of humor, and her interests lie all over the spectrum, so it is never boring to be around her.

I do see that she struggles with a lot of self-doubt, and she has in fact struggled with depression in the past, though that is probably not type-related. Honestly, she's genuinely such an interesting person, and one of my few friends that I never tire from. And i'm very picky about my friends, haha

You would not think so based on her type, but she's actually such a good public speaker.

It is strange because she has a weird combination of confidence and self-doubt. She does not seem to second guess the things that keep me up at night, but en revanche she struggles over things I don't think about at all. So in that respect I've always had some admiration for her, because I feel that we are similar, yet our comforts, and I admire her for the things that are effortless for her (that she doesn't even realize are that way!)

This is my tritype too. The 469 description fits me perfectly. I doubt myself on almost everything, always questioning my motives on why I do anything. I have my own perspectives on things, but most of the time I'm too afraid to voice them in fear of being ridiculed or looked at as too strange. Deep inside, I am really sensitive and always was an outsider in most social circles, so risking being ridiculed in any way would make me feel even more inferior than I already feel. I'm trying to be more open now because keeping to one's self for so long I think is unhealthy, but admittedly it is very difficult.

This seems to me a tritype that is usually mired in self-doubt and anxiety. Why? 4-6-9s are often phobic six, and the phobic six tends to lack self-confidence, and fears being without guidance and being different from others. The 9 fears discord and longs for peace. These two conflict with the 4's desire for authenticity and individuality, and are magnified by the 4's tendency toward strong emotions. Especially in the absence of a guiding figure/entity, I think 4-6-9s tend to be immobilized by a tug of war of the enneatypes, always seeking a light at the end of the tunnel.

478 – The Messenger Archetype

478/487: Innovative and direct 4. This is the most positive, fun-loving and non-conforming 4. This 4 is highly creative, original, and the most 'out of the box'. Outwardly, this 4 is self-possessed, as sadness and insecurity are hidden. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, and at the mercy of injustice.

748/784: Direct and intuitive 7. This is the most independent and creative 7. Original and intense, this 7 follows their own muse. They are often designers. This is the emotional and non-conforming 7 that is frequently mistyped as a 4 or 8, especially if a sexual subtype. The core fears of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, and being abandoned.

847/874: Intuitive and innovative 8. This is the most creative and charismatic 8. Open-minded and eccentric, this 8 has an unconventional point of view. Often moody, this 8 can be mistaken for a 4 or a 7, especially with a sexual subtype. The core fears are of weakness, being controlled, disempowered, humiliated, vulnerable, at the mercy of injustice, being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

Gut: 8 Heart: 4 Head: 7

Expressing Creativity

- 478s are the most creative tritype and will do whatever they can to produce something they have in mind. They are very independent and often have a one-track mind;

Independence

- 478s are one of the most self-reliant of all the archetypes, and therefore can be seen as uncooperative and aloof to most people. They hate to make compromises to their inner vision;

Activity

- 478s are very active and don't like to stay idle for too long. Their intuition is often linked to their instinctive nature and therefore can follow their gut feeling quite easily;

Emotional Life

- 478s are a little less concerned with feelings things deeply and prefer using their emotional side for their creative endeavors. They love to express what they feel in a novel, unprecedented ways;

Intellectual Processes

- 478s see through what's missing in order to open new paths of learning for themselves and others. They can be quite adamant about going a certain way and are confident and positive while doing it. They can literally see multiple possibilities to combine and create something new in their environment;

Security

- 478s find security through concretizing their vision and dreams, and by making things happen in a new and original way. They are true non-conformists who strive to be free from going the conventional way;

Relationships

- 478s need deep and various relationships in which they can learn and share thoughts about the world; they are more in touch with their emotions, too;

Main Assets

- 478s' greatest asset is that they are truly creative and want to concretize their inner visions in a truly original way;

Role in society

- 478s want to create their own path and stay off of stereotypes and conformity;

Potential Problems

- 478s are the least cooperative of all 27 tritypes because they need to see and experience everything their own way. They may seek freedom in every situation and might feel easily trapped when conforming to a certain way of operating things. They also tend to overly believe in their capacity to change a situation and not take into consideration other's input, which might cause them to be perceived as arrogant and opinionated. Finally, they tend to only follow what's inspiring to them only, leaving out uninteresting stuff that can be useful for later;

Patterns & Structure

- 478s are triple creative and innovative. This means that this archetype has all the three enneatypes in each center of intelligence that want to forge their own path in life and make their dreams a reality. They are often called trailblazers because they like to go off the beaten path in order to create their own reality. They are very independent and use their intuition to help other people see things differently, typically by letting them see all the possibilities that can unfold from one decision.

The self-preservation subtype is less flamboyant and more practical than the other two subtypes. They want to maintain their independence and enjoy life to the fullest while creating. While they have access to their emotions, they tend to disregard them if they take too much negative space in their lives.

Sexual variants are the most magical and intense and want to make things happen quickly with panache. Like all sexual subtypes, then tend to be deeply involved in their intimate relationships and may want to search for the ideal partner. They can also fall in love with their ideas and aren't always grounded.

The social subtype is more protective and feel they're on a mission to help people understand the world differently. They like to communicate their enthusiasm, but can be a little less independent than the sexual and self-preservation variants.

Interests:

- being creative and spreading your message
- freedom

Mission:

- finding truth and coming up with ideas and spreading those

Blind spot:

- overly focused on your own ideas, coming across as self-absorbed

Fear:

- not being in control

If you are a 478, you are intuitive, innovative, and protective. You want to be original, creative, and straightforward. A cutting-edge tracker of both your internal and external worlds, you are an unconventional, passionate, and self-possessed master of solutions. Outwardly, you are confident with a sense of panache, but, inwardly, you are emotionally vulnerable. You see people and situations from diverse points of view, but always need a creative edge to keep the momentum going.

Your life mission is to find truth and communicate your findings. A true messenger, you are happiest when you use your creativity to find compassionate ways to understand yourself and empower others. You can be so focused on your opinions, insights and what is new and profound that your freedom seeking nature can come across as arrogant, resistant, and/or uncooperative. Moody, intense, eccentric. Intuitive, and innovative. Most creative, original, and nonconforming.

That blind spot was huge for me, having everyone in my life nod in agreement when it's read to them was a little hard, I really don't see myself as uncooperative, but that's the nature of having a blind spot. My grandmother is a sp7w8 748, and we are very similar. She can seem so adamant about getting her way that it can look extremely childish if she really digs in. However, I try other tactics before getting to that, but eventually the boundaries harden and the flexibility I normally have completely disintegrates.

The trick differentiating 854 and 874 is their overall energy level and the way they handle anxiety. 874's 7 wing is amplified, so they are really seeking novelty and stimulation in their environment and are more confident in their ability to get what they want. They are also more impulsive and are extremely quick-minded or mercurial. 874 is focused on current or future possibilities and have a more positive outlook on any situation. They are focused on the magical and uncanny.

The 847 is the passionate, cutting edge, innovative, compassionate, freedom seeking, creative, non-conformist focused on implementing and manifesting their original vision.

4 heart + 7 head + 8 gut = triple anarchist

*Most freedom loving--478, 874, 784

Most creative and innovative tritype

Probably comes off extroverted, what with 7 and 8 both in the mix. Very direct and assertive. A lot more relaxed than say, 458 or 468, they're probably going to the one who tells 458 to loosen up, and 468 to lighten up. High energy. Intense. Bold. Creative. Self expressive. Can be scattered and belligerent as well as highly emotional if underdeveloped. Positive, excitable, emotionally honest, and friendly when they are healthy. Impulsive risk-takers. Challenge the norm. Take pride in their individuality, not likely to conform. Innovative, enjoys their freedom. Somewhat flamboyant. Eccentric, individualistic. Probably not as emotional in the "moping" sense but in a more loss of self-control, "angry" outbursts manner, but at their best, engaging, influential, encouraging, vibrant, bright, and unique to themselves.

Sexual 748 is a very flamboyant type...748/847/478 is the most in need of freedom. This is the messenger archetype that feels they have a message to impart and wants the freedom to explore themselves and their external worlds. With 7 in charge it's an extremely hard to pin down type, that typically has no problems expressing the flamboyancy this tritype can bring (with 4 in charge the self consciousness can take over, and with 8 in charge you get more of a playful 7ish 8). She also said it's the least political of the tritypes (except maybe the 548 tritype) because of the outspoken nature of the three types coming together (which helps explain why the whole political nature of grad school completely evades me).

Tritype 748 be like: "Life is full of wounds and bad things, but that's what makes life beautiful. By the way, shut the fk up, I am depressed."

Full of energy, extremely high openness, loves new ideas and trying new things, and is not one to judge. Extremely sociable and charismatic. A little stuck in their ways and might try too hard to be 'different' or unique. Can be somewhat emotional and irrational over their own beliefs. Very fun to be around overall and helps me get out of my shell.

847: Intuitive and innovative. Most creative, original, and nonconforming 8. Moody, intense, eccentric 8 especially if sx.

784: Direct and intuitive 7. Most independent, original and creative 7. Can be moody. Most non-conforming, and intense 7.

4-7-8 is the most individualistic and fun-loving 4. Appear more self-possessed as sadness is hidden.

The 8-7-4 is a fast-paced, emotional, creative, and optimistic Type 8.

874 and 854 are very similar and can be difficult to distinguish, as 8 has access to both 7 and 5. What is helpful is to look at the differences between 7 and 5. The most critical aspect is engagement. The 7 engages and brings a positive outlook to the 84_. The 5 is more internal and brings more introversion and reserve. The 874 is more outgoing and spontaneous. It is the difference between facts vs activities.

478 and 451 are very different types of 4. The 478 is intensely individualistic and more assertive, whereas the 451 is individualistic but much more introspective and reserved. The 478 is somewhat optimistic and focuses more on the need for inspiration than the 451. The 451 is more particular and is more motivated by gathering meaningful information that is useful.

I think for me, when I was deciding between 479 and 478, I realized that my tendency to push and shake up things overrides my tendency to calm down. Although I can do both. I ultimately didn't end up going into counseling because I am a.) too impatient b.) too bossy and directive and c.) need to have more freedom to invite change than that discipline can allow.

(4)-7-8 : The Aggressive 4

4-(7)-8 : The Reactive 7

4-7-(8) : The idealistic 8

Somewhat manic. Dramatic and somewhat confrontational. Uncontrolled emotions.

4 and 7 together combine to create a sense of being creative, intuitive, magical, and imaginative.

Eight with a four fix: the moody, loner eight. Distinct outsider quality; as if on a highly personal mission. Tendency to feel exempt from conventional rules and circumstances.

If 478, there is an emphasis on freedom, inspiration, and diversity.

This tritype is the most creative type on the enneagram, regardless of which type is in charge. This creativity may or may not have artistic talent, but always has a sense of aesthetics. All three crave authenticity, depth and individuality,

The 468 and 478 Tritypes® have a driving and essential need for depth, meaning, and transformation according to their sense of truth...

478 Creativity is the leading passion of choice

The 784 and 874 will apply it in the world. They are the most farsighted of the Tritypes®, which means they are always ahead of their time. When people finally understand the message, they are on to new messages that are challenged. But they will still proceed. They will take the risk to send the messages they have discovered. Eventually, their discoveries are appreciated...but it is rarely in the moment.

The 478 or 487 will do so in a more introverted way, usually through art and the written word. This is the truly original person the other 4s long to be but they suffer for being so farsighted. They are rarely appreciated in their own time...appreciation comes later.

The 487 craves attention, affirmation, and mirroring more than autonomy and freedom. They need to be mirrored as not only unique, but highly original. Their greatest demands are those they make of themselves.

The 847 craves autonomy and must be the master and commander of their lives. The 847 does not seek mirroring unless very narcissistic. All narcissistic types demand an undue amount of mirroring to feel safe. The 487 uses the power of indifference when in defense.

If your primary Type is 8, you might have a Tritype configuration of 8-7-4. This Tritype combination indicates that you would most likely be a strong, positive person who seeks solutions (8), options (7), and meaning (4). What is fascinating is that if the strategy of Type 8 fails to give you the desired results of overcoming obstacles, you would then employ the strategy of Type 7 and then, if needed, Type 4. These three types rapidly cascade into one another and continue cycling throughout the day.

The 748 is a messenger of the new...always ahead of their time...triple creative, innovative doers...no restrictions....must have freedom...original thinkers that follow their own muse and must get the message out.

784--visionary, powerful, and aesthetically brilliant. Always ahead of the curve.

874 tritype feels lighter and more enthusiastic to me than does the 847 tritype, which feels more like a strike of lightning burrowing into the ground.

874 is a fast-paced, optimistic, creative, and emotional type 8.

Perhaps the tritype is 847 where 7 acts as an ever-running generator, constantly humming underneath the surface. The 7 energy operates more like “monkey mind” than a physically expressed energy.

As a sx 874, I feel called to discover as much as I can about human nature and then share what I learned. Some of my greatest moments of clarity have come during times of great adversity. When I feel grief over loss, it always feels personal, and I feel separate from others. When I allow the pain and suffering the 8 wants to avoid, I am able to connect to that which is universal and know that all people everywhere understand the meaning of loss. This is when I remember that I am never truly alone or separate.

The 458, 468 and 478 are all truth tellers in their own way. The 458 and 478 are their own authorities.

The 847 is more extroverted intuition, with the attention going outward. It is lighter and is more optimistic

The 478 Tritype® has the three “creative” Enneagram Types, one from each triad (4, 7, and 8), which include the two types that prefer what is unusual (4 and 7), the two types that share the line of intensity (4 and 8), and the two assertive types (7 and 8); thus creating a type that is innovative, creative, outspoken, intense, assertive, and deep with an original sense of style.

For example, the 478 Tritype® Archetype has the three “creative” Enneagram Types that are focused on authenticity, individuality, and following their own muse, one from each triad (478). This combination can also be seen as the unconventional non-conformists for the same reasons.

A key feature that is minimized in the 478 Tritype® is the 4s extreme self-consciousness, especially when the 4 is in the third position.

The self-confidence and “can do” qualities of the 8 and 7 decrease the intensity of the anxiety and self-consciousness experienced by the type 4.

The 4 in the 478 Tritype® adds more access to emotional and intellectual insights than the other two Tritypes® with 7 and 8; 278 and 378 Tritypes® respectively. This increases the 478's ability to respond with more sensitivity and emotional depth.

If you were an 874, you would have secondary strategies that are very different from a 826. The 874 is a fast-paced creative, heartfelt, and optimistic type 8 whereas the 826 is a more cynical, loyal, helpful, and heroic type 8. Further, if you are the 874 type 8, you may relate to a 748 or 478 more than another type 8 that has a different Tritype®.

To understand how this works in practice, if someone with a Tritype® of 874, finds that taking charge like an 8 isn't working, they may try to lighten up or be positive like a 7, and if that doesn't work, may search for meaning like a 4. The 8 fear of being disempowered is driving the process. If the 8 still feels disempowered and unable to direct their circumstances, the 874 may feel over-extended and scattered (7) and painfully lacking (4). So this person has used the strategies of three Enneagram Types, one from each of the three Enneagram Centers (Head-Heart-Gut), in a preferred order of 8-7-4.

Sexual 874 Tritype®: The sexual 8 drive to possess unquestionable devotion to surrender control combined with the 874 need for what is new, novel, cutting edge, powerful, beautiful, and meaningful creates a need to have and be devoted to passionate relationships and endeavors that are constantly evolving and/or changing.

So the sexual 874 passionately pursues the data that is intriguing (sx8), and does so personally (sx4) from as many sources as possible (sx7) to find what is magical (7), meaningful (4), and still concrete (8).

The sexual drive for closeness, intensity, and intimate encounters combined with the 874 drive to learn what is new, novel, exciting (7) provocative (8), meaningful (4), and uncharted areas, (874) creates a drive to find meaning in most everything that interests them,

The sx 7 loves the fantasy and imagination, the sx 8 the intensity, and the sx 4 the depth. The 4 and 7 also want ideal circumstances, As a result, this Tritype® and instinct wants it all and focuses on what is missing and perceived to be important and how to get it and want to find meaning in suffering.

All 8s have to learn the value of being sympathetic and to give encouraging feedback. But when the sexual instinct and the 4 are combined with 8, it creates a more sensitive and empathetic 8. So this 874 is a more emotional Tritype® combination. Having said that, the sexual 864 is the most outwardly emotional and reactive of the 27 Tritypes® whereas the sexual 874 is more hidden and demonstrates the 'cool' and finesse of the 7.

The 7 also brings a light touch, a sense of humor and optimism even when they feel sensitive and focus on what is missing. And the 8 brings a "can do" and "get over it" attitude, which at times be confusing to the sexual 874 Tritype®-instinctual subtype combination.

So the sexual 874 seeks ways to learn more by including personal experiences such as personal interviews with people to learn about the type's experiences from the inside-out (sx) and what it feels like to be a type, Tritype®, or instinct with all the intimate details. They do this to give additional meaning to their findings. Each interview would be personal in nature and created in the world of exclusively "you and me". The focus of the sexual 874 is on discovery and nuances that are revealed and what is exclusive to the work they are doing.

Social 874 Tritype®: The social 8 drive for friends for strength and security by grouping (so), and having power though having strong alliances combined with the 874 need for what is new, novel, cutting edge, powerful, beautiful, and meaningful creates a need to have a socially elite (4), powerful (8), and progressive (7) group.

So, the social 874 pursues the greater world of others to form their entourage (so) as a means for survival. They gather people to “gather” the data they want. They prefer to share with their group who will then in turn share with their others. So, their focus is on gathering what is concrete (8) in a friendly, extroverted manner (7 and 8) but it is more impersonal than the sexual 874 (so). However, they want what is meaningful (4) and telling about others, so, what is true for others in their extended circle of influence, which includes like-minded individuals (7). They share what others have said in a group setting.

They are at the center of activity (so8) and their cohorts create the arms of their extended influence. Likewise, they find meaning (so4) from the standpoint of curiosity from the diversity of their tribe of participants with less of a need for intrigue and personal interviews like the sexual 874. That would only slow the social 874 down. Enjoyment comes from group participation... the more, the merrier.

If there are interviews, they would be in the world of “all of us” or the “greater world” rather than the personal experience the sx 874 has a lust for. This is because personal sharing excludes others in the mind of the social 874 for they are happiest when everyone is involved at the same time.

The sharing of the data of the so 874 would be enthusiastic with a look of surprise and with comments like “Can you believe that the social 146 is the most self-critical of all the 81 combinations of type, Tritype, and instinctual types, and that they are secretly very shy and inhibited?????” “That must be hard to live with...I sure couldn’t live that way because I count on my self-confidence!”

Self-Preserving 874 Tritype®: The self-preserving 8 drive for satisfactory survival combined with the 874 need for what is new, novel, cutting edge, powerful, beautiful, and meaningful creates a need for practical but special, beautiful and diverse (7) physical comforts such a beautiful car or home.

The self-preserving 874 is less interested in gathering data. But they do want to know what makes people tick because they then know how to manage problems that interfere with their comforts and satisfactory survival. Of the 3 instincts of the 874, the sp874 pursues the data in the most impersonal manner.

The self-preserving instinct brings a more nuts and bolts, down to earth way of going after information. Rather than a lust for personal relating (sx874) or a gusto for social engagement (so874), the sp 874 is focused on concrete ways of learning about what makes people do what they do.

The self-preserving 874 brings a need for comfort and satisfactory survival, and the 874 brings a need to be on the cutting edge, to create, and then to share. So like the other 874s, they go outward (8 and 7) to find meaning (4), by creating a tool or process to gather the information that is practical and less taxing. In a way, they are very methodical...not that the other two can't be...it is just that the sp874 is more comfortable approaching a problem or a process in the most simplified and straight-forward manner, which is a little plain for the other two subtypes of 874.

They gather the information to figure out what motivates people (8), why people are so different (7), and why people feel the way they do and what it means (4). But most importantly, they are the most inclined to be concerned with how the process impacts them. And, ultimately, they wish to find out why they as the sp874s feel emotionally reactive in some situations more than others (4) what they do in different circumstances (7) and what it costs them in time and energy (sp and 8). They want to protect their space and environment...their way of being in the world.

They can be social at times, as all 8s are seeking energy, but they can be more 5ish. Likewise, they may seem like they want closeness, but what they want is the type of connection that comes from something beautiful (4) rather than interpersonal relating like the sx874. They can be close to a few, but they do not seek closeness as a goal. The 4 in the Tritype® keep them focused on what is original and precious. The one Tritype® that is even more removed from the need for personal relating is the sp/so 358.

The sp 874 does have those that are in their circle of care that they provide for. And they seek ways to find the resources they want with the data expansively (8 and 7) by fulfilling their need for what is meaningful and most revealing (4).

For 478s, there is a need to get to the truth. It's more grounded and based in reality, and can be outwardly quite confident, even if internally there is emotional vulnerability. They would be more inclined to be uncompromising on what they want or resistant to others views when they don't agree. They still have the 7 avoidance, however mixed with the 8, it would only go so far before reality needed to be faced.

479 – The Gentle Spirit Archetype

479/497: Innovative and accepting 4. This is the most positive 4. A true gentle spirit, this is the ethereal, elusive, and magical 4 with the defense of optimism. This 4 hides sadness and pessimism to stay connected to others. This 4 is attracted to the healing arts. The core fears are of being inadequate, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, and disharmony.

749/794: Accepting and intuitive 7. This is the gentle and magical, fairy-like 7. This 7 needs peace and harmony with depth, symbolism, and meaning. The 7 is very allowing, but hyper focused on being positive. This 7 is often mistaken for a 4, especially with a sexual subtype. The core fears are of emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, missing out, conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, inadequacy, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, and being abandoned.

947/974: Intuitive and innovative 9. This is the most gentle, creative, and ethereal 9. This 9 tends to be sensitive and emotional and hides negative feelings for fear of being separate from others. Has a sense of mystery with magical thinking and gentle actions. The core fears are of conflict, being loveless, complication, discord, being shutout, inharmonious, emotionally cut off, ordinary, commonplace, being abandoned, emotional pain, sadness, disappointment, boredom, limitation, being incomplete, and missing out.

Gut: 9 Heart: 4 Head: 7

Expressing Creativity

- 479s are also very creative, but can stay stuck in the conceptual phase for too long. Their laziness and fear of conflict can make them uneasy about completing something;

Independence

- 479s can accept help more easily, especially if said help is for facilitating putting their ideas into a concrete way to implement them;

Activity

- 479s can be passive compared to 147 and 478 and often find themselves not going through their ideas long enough and become a bit frustrated;

Energy Levels

- 479s are the most spontaneous and least conscious of their energy depletion compared to 459 and 469; they like to interact with new people because of the variety that they usually bring.

Reaction to Change

- 479s are the least likely to react negatively to change compared to 459 and 469, unless if deemed bad from the start; they like being surprised and need a regular change of pace in order to feel at ease.

Routine

- 479s aren't really comfortable with routine. While they can find it pleasant for a while, repeating menial tasks over and over again feels very tiresome quickly. They must find a way to escape into something fun while doing boring tasks for them to tolerate it.

General Behavior

- 479s are naturally more lively and outgoing compared to 459 and 469. They can appear quirky and impish in their behavior, which can be a way to release their pent-up anxiety. They are very spontaneous and novelty-seeking compared to the Contemplative (459) and the Seeker (469).

Positivity Levels

- 479s hide their sadness in order to remain positive. They tend to suffer in silence because they don't want to appear as negative to others;

Communication skills

- 479s are more introspective and are sensitive to painful experiences. Consequently, they are able to add a dash of healing presence to their words;

Dealing with Own Emotions

- 479s are more inclined to look into their emotional self, but may glance over too painful emotions if they take too long to analyze or contemplate.

Potential Problems

- 479s can bottle-up their creative potential for too long and end up feeling dissatisfied and bitter at life in general. They should try implementing a daily dose of structure into their routine because they tend to focus too much on the agreeable and the positive side of things and not focusing on personal work. They can also be easily contented and therefore avoid pushing themselves to create something truly great;

Patterns & Structure

- 479s are triple Magical or Imaginative. This means that this archetype has all 3 enneatypes in each center of intelligence that need to create an internal framework of possibilities in order to sense a purpose in their lives. They like to see things in a new light and can idealize their views into thinking that their way is more pleasant, therefore it's better. This is the most positive FOUR, the most introverted SEVEN and the most unusual NINE.

Sexual subtypes with this archetype are extremely imaginative and passionate about their work. They can even merge with their passion and shove aside more menial tasks or leave out boring details for the big picture.

Self-Pres are more grounded and practical and can be more focused on simple pleasures of life than grand gestures like the Sexual one.

The Social subtype is more ambiguous and can sacrifice a lot of its internal desires in order to fit the group's agenda.

Interests:

- finding meaning
- looking for peace and quiet

Mission:

- finding out what is meaningful and helping others find meaning

Blind spots:

- look through rose-tinted glasses, and fail to see what needs work, or what negative emotions need to be addressed
- focused more on fantasy than on what you want in the real world

Fears:

- being rejected
- conflict
- not finding meaning

If you are a 479, you are intuitive, innovative, and accepting. You want to be original, positive, and peaceful. You are identified with the defense of optimism and tend to hide your painful feelings and pessimism for fear of being rejected. Likewise, you see the wonder in beauty and are tenderhearted, lyrical, and idealistic in the way you relate to others. You are attracted to the healing arts. You are highly receptive, but always have your own distinct point of view.

This is the sort of sprite or fairy-like tritype. There is a need to remain positive while still searching for meaning. The blind spot is that you can be so focused on ideal circumstances that you become trapped in magical thinking and fail to speak your higher truth and act in accordance with your true feelings. So they find themselves glossing over negative feeling states in favor of something more comfortable or positive. When 4 is in charge, there's a tendency to not see all the ways in which depression or sadness is evaded through this magical thinking process. Your growing edge is to speak your truth, even if it will create conflict with others. Going along to get along or to keep things light and upbeat denies the truth of the moment and can cause you to become distant from yourself. Higher love has a voice, and true joy is not dependent on the image of being happy.

The life mission is that this is the true healer archetype. They are often found doing bodywork or other healing practices, as these are the 3 types that have a desire to transform. They like to inspire people toward happiness through expressing their creativity in a peaceful, non-intrusive way. In addition, you need to identify what is truly meaningful in life and help people transform negative feeling into positive change. A true gentle spirit, you feel happiest when you have creative expression to reconnect with your innermost self and facilitate change.

Probably the laziest tritype next to the 954s, lol.

She said this is the most lyrical type—a sort of ethereal archetype (so is the 459, but it is a more withdrawn ethereal quality—almost wispy and ghost like) whereas the energy here is lighter and more impish, or I think when it's a male energy you get a strong trickster archetype (like dfgray). Playful yet meaningful. Very idealistic (although not quite as idealistic as the 471) but still concerned with maintaining positivity and feelings of being up. I think Regina Spektor is an example of this archetype with 4 in charge.

I'm actually put off by the idea of being in a "healing profession", though there's a strong likelihood that 7-4-9 is my tritype. I guess it's a reluctance to mix energies with society at large, or something of that nature. I wouldn't want to be in a profession where I constantly had to touch people. I'm not a cold person, I just wouldn't want a day filled with people-touching, if that makes sense.

EDIT: Oh, also, I would have to say "reluctant to show anything negative" is not such a likely descriptor for me.

(Reply to above) Katherine said the 479 tritype in any order all took some kind of issue with the term "healer", even if they were in healing professions or were attracted to it. She was wondering what it was about that term that was off-putting, so what you've shared above is interesting (from a 7 perspective).

She said this is the gentle soul tritype that has a healing presence on others—whether or not they intend to. So when she says healer, this is what she means, as opposed to being vocationally attracted to the healing arts (although this is very common with this tritype).

Positive, more relaxed than 478, less active but still have a "the cup is half full" attitude. Helpful and peaceful. Introspective. May avoid negative feelings, due to both 7 and 9, either running from or minimizing unsavory experiences. Daydreamers. Idealistic. Lighthearted yet still meaningful. Gentle impact, rather than overwhelming on others, can affect them and buoy their moods, keep them out of the dumps, but they're not too excited. Soothing quality. Introverted type, though amicable. Creative pursuits, be it ideas of thought or expressed through some artistic venue. Dreamy and imaginative, less grounded.

So while I consider myself attracted to healing, and am interested in healing arts (energy healing, Reiki, etc.). I want to manifest it through a more intense and provocative way. Something that shakes people up in order to invite growth and development.

When 8 replaces the 9, you get more of a sense of groundedness or at least more practicality and realism that can seem a little harder edged and less lyrical.

For me, there's less of a tendency toward optimism for the sake of being positive or keeping it light, although I don't like things to get too serious, but if things need to be serious, then I'm willing to go there. It's more of an "if it's ugly, let's look at it." I actually struggle with that within myself; needing to see it if it's ugly (4 with 5 wing) with a propensity toward evasiveness and denial (with the 7 and 8) it's a strange mixture. Katherine says with 9 it (whatever "it" may be) must be transmuted into something lyrical, beautiful, or playful to be tolerable.

This tritype [927] is the most identified with seeing themselves as peaceful. More than any other tritype, they need peace and positive relating to experience a sense of being... so are extremely uncomfortable with negativity in relationships. The 479 doesn't like it, but expects it.

4 and 7 together combine to create a sense of being creative, intuitive, magical, and imaginative. The gut type determines the flavor. 479s are elegant, wispy, and ethereal. When 4 is dominant, the 4 is reluctant to show their edgy, more negative emotions. The emphasis is on having an image that is deep but not seen as difficult. Suffering is more private.

The 749 is the 7 that is the most elusive, liquid, and fluid. They are positive in a gentle way with a touch of sadness. They are identified with being deep but still future oriented and forward moving, whereas the 479 is identified with the past and what is missing and believed to be of importance.

The 947 usually thinks that they are the 4 as they see life as bittersweet and feel deeply, but they are not as intense as the 4 or as hungry for diversity and experience as the 7. The 947 and 974 seek harmonic resonance more than the 479 or 794. They want depth and beauty, but seek peace and tranquility more. They pine in a quiet, gentle manner. Furthermore, they lack voltage...and struggle with naming their preferences in the face of adversity. Think of Dr. Zhivago is an archetype of the 947. The 479, 749, and 947 are all very gentle and nostalgic.

If you have the sexual instinct as dominant, you could easily identify with 974. The 972 is less ethereal and more focused on being positive. The 974 knows that they feel unhappy, they are more inclined to hide so that they will not be rejected for being negative.

All the 7+9 combinations are somewhat positive. The 279 is focused on being pleasant. The 379 the most positive. The 479 is positive outwardly, but doesn't always feel it.

The 479 with 4 dominant feels devastated by negative mirroring. If a flaw is pointed out, it feels disheartening. With negative feedback, the 479 will have trouble holding on to their sense of self. Self-esteem suffers as the 479's sense of self is too fluid and takes the shape of the last mirror.

For the most part, 479s like to be in the healing/helping professions where they have the opportunity to use their intuition and creativity.

The 471 and the 479 are both focused on the vision, creativity, and the magical. The difference is in the gut center. The 471 has three types with access to 1, so are very critical of themselves and feel they must manifest their vision. The 479 is less strident and more soft-spoken and gentle. They are dreamers and intuit, but can be shy about pushing to manifest their visions.

9s fear being in conflict. 479 vs 469. Look at the level of confidence and optimism. The 7 brings a light touch with magical thinking, hoping for the best. In contrast, the 6 brings support and loyalty. Both are highly intuitive, but the 469 has more doubts. The 479 is more future oriented, focusing on the possibilities. The 469 is more dutiful with a heavier heart, fearing that they can't make enough of a difference.

479 do not realize how healing their gentle nature can be. The 479 is more inclined to side step, make nice, and try to get along as conflict feels unbearable.

Tendency to be lazy and put off important things for the sake of fun and enjoyment. Can be passive-aggressive to those close to them. A dreamer in every sense of the word. They are artistic and creative to a fault. They love to go on flights of imagination, and dream up fantasy worlds. Furthermore, they may often find themselves disappointed in the real world. They are intensely conflict-avoidant, somewhat desperately so. They almost always seem to have an intense “hidden pain” that they show to no one. This type frequently hides their true thoughts and opinions from others, instead choosing to tell others something positive, fluffy, or humorous. The type of person to go through a whole conversation without revealing a single thing about themselves, instead deciding to put the other person as at much ease as possible.

“They hide their pessimism and come across as optimistic, and for the most part they are optimistic, but they don't allow their pessimistic side to be viewed by others because they feel like they will be emotionally cut off or not desirable if they share it.”

Definitely the softest tritype in any order. It's so fluid, ethereal, and intangible. They are focused on easiness and fun. Imaginative and idealistic and fairy like, but lacks the action and drive that 478 has.

Inwardly, they feel a lot of intensity, especially if they are the sexual instinct. Identification is with gentleness and can feel uncomfortable if they share something negative.

479 and 379 I have deemed the “cool guy” tritypes. When 4 is there, you get that sort of archetype of the cool artist, laid back, playful, witty, but with a sort of “hidden sorrow”. You sense there is more there, but that they are keeping you at bay in order to avoid dipping too much into the swamp.

7-4-9 (and the variations thereof) would have a good dose of magical thinking. Tending to overdose (in some form) on imagination and whim.

If you knew just how off-base the names 'Healer' and 'Gentle Spirit' are for the 9-4-7 tritype, how slanted the name 'Ambassador' is for the 9-3-7 (or as you imply 9-4-7 with a very heavy Three wing), and how pronounced the narcissism and exhibitionism of these two tritypes can be, you might not be so eager to identify with them. Also, the challenge to feel grounded in the physical world, or at least in one's own physicality, is part of the Nine itself, not to mention the Four.

“974/947: A more abandoning and erratic 9. An insatiable and emotionally discriminating 9.”

I'm 974 and others wouldn't describe me as 'erratic' (nor would I). I think 'abandoning and erratic' comes from your so/sx stack, which comes through as a loud note, to me, in your posts.

As for “insatiable and emotionally discriminating”, I think this also taps your stack. Your so/sx-ness brings forward the more gregarious aspect of the 7 in your tritype, which manifests as a more-extroverted interplay with those in your presence—though I'm not saying you're an extrovert—there's just more desire for inclusion there. For me (sp/sx), the 7 in my tritype shows up more exclusively as “private mental fun”, with only a small interest in “sharing the good times with y'all”.

The 4 (in my tritype) shows up as a focus on aesthetics (including a pretty high degree of full-on snobbery in that area), plus life-long issues with depression and feelings of being valueless.

Also, both sevens and nines have a tendency to want to avoid dealing with negative situations for different reasons. With 7-9-4, I'd guess there would be a lot more denial than the usual 7, but with 4 in there, it couldn't be kept up for as long, so there might be cycles of denial-and-crash. There would probably be more underlying self-doubt than is normally found in seven, as well as using the withdrawing defense a bit more.

Yeah, I think seven brings a mild denial through optimism...and then nines tend to get into a bit of denial because of their desire to avoid conflict/upsetting their equilibrium. So if nine were one of your trifixes, you'd probably have a bit of the "optimistic denial" of 7, and a bit of the "I don't want to deal with this" denial of 9, as well. By contrast, an 8 trifix would probably be more of a sobering influence on the seven, and 1 would probably add a bit of criticality and increased perfectionism (also making for a triple frustration type, with the 4 and 7...but probably less likely due to what you said about the "live and let live" approach to people.)

Cate Blanchet could be a 4. I see the 479 or 471 tritype...ethereal one moment, strident the next. But there is a gentleness in her energy that seems more 479.

(4)-7-9 : The Positive 4

4-(7)-9 : The Withdrawn 7

4-7-(9) : The idealistic 9

A dreamer in every sense of the word. They love to go on flights of imagination, and dream up fantasy worlds. They may often find themselves disappointed in the real world, however.

974: intuitive and innovative 9. Most creative 9, especially with an 8 wing (I would think 1 wing here). Tends to be moody. Extraverted 7ish.

As a 9-4-7, I value emotion in a 4-ish way. But the valuing seems once-removed in relation to my 9-ness. It's a belief (about emotion), and though beliefs affect behavior and attitude, in the case of the secondary tritype elements, they're not as reflexive as the response from the primary type.

The 479 is more gentle...and more ethereal. The 479 displays congenial attitudes and hides their feelings of anger for fear of being rejected. The 469 is more phobic than the 468. The 479 seems more easy going as they are more conflict-avoidant. They can demonstrate the outbursts of the sexual 4 when there is a threat to intimacy, but feel terrible shame as their identity is built around being gentle and kind. The 468 feels more inclined to be the truth teller at all costs, so they take greater risks.

As 4 is dominant, in addition to seeing themselves as intuitive and deep with a need for beauty and aesthetics, the 479s see themselves as loving, innovative, and gentle, the 468 as intense and iconoclastic, and the 469 as thoughtful and introspective.

Calm and robo-face guy (somewhat creepy to strangers ofc) on the surface, but having an emotional party inside. Being the silent, serious one nearly all the time, but can randomly transform into a jester and confuse people to death.

Easygoing and fun-loving, no fks given attitude, but they also have a very deep well of emotions that they may not show to others. Chill hippie person tritype.

If you have the sexual instinct as dominant, you could easily identify with 974. The 972 is less ethereal and more focused on being positive. The 974 knows that they feel unhappy. They are more inclined to hide so that they will not be rejected for being negative.

I'm a 479. Because someone already explained the logic behind it, I'll tell you some things about me that you might relate to if you're one:

- I am very shy and self-conscious, actually. I have bad social anxiety and hate to be the center of attention. But if I have to be, I always have to do something "different" or memorable.
- I am an introvert, but I love to be around people, experience new things, explore many possibilities and can kind of mask an extroversion. I hate being stuck on routine, and I look forward to enjoying life in many ways. That's probably 7.
- I care deeply about people and want to make the world a more peaceful place, starting by changing the world around me. I want to bring people together and make everyone feel good and loved. Likewise, I'm very optimistic and idealistic for certain things, and I'm often seen as naive because of that when I'm not. I hide feelings until I can't handle them anymore. Probably because of 9.

I'd say that 479 is mainly the one to be passionate about pursuing different paths and finding their purpose and communicate the universal truths in new ways because that's how they come to realizations. Also, they are usually unlike the 4 stereotype; they're overly adventurous and open about their interests and crave external stimulation to get creative, but that's just my 2 cents. Not really sure if I got it right :)

I tend to make a good impression upon most people. I'm friendly, energetic, and polite. I tend to say weird things and have weird conversation topics, which will endear me to most people, but cut me off from some others. Also, my flirtatiousness will intimidate some people (or give them the wrong idea!) I get along well with almost everyone, and I don't start disliking anyone unless I'm provoked. Even then, this dislike will pass easily, unless the person is a repeat offender of jerkiness.

I'm an introvert who can play the extrovert very well. I'm a good conversationalist and have no problem going up and talking to random people. When I'm nervous, I just smile and say things at about a mile a minute. This has gotten me through several important interviews with success.

I'm a quick thinker. I can think on my feet quite well, like most 7s. However, I'm also a deep thinker. I need a lot of alone time to figure out the mysteries of life and the universe. I love to express myself through the arts, and my 7-ness helps me out of my shell to get experiences that inspire my art.

I'm quirky and eccentric. People think I'm weird, but I don't care. I don't care about embarrassing myself in front of others, because I do it basically every day. I'm accident-prone.

I have NO problem putting myself out there. I will tell people the most random things about myself. I don't try to change people. I'm open-minded and a strong proponent of "live and let live."

I'm a bit more daring than most Fours. When I'm feeling spontaneous, I have a very Seven-ish way of wanting to go out and try new things. I love new experiences, new places, and meeting new people. Then the other half of the time, I'll stay in my room, writing or researching, or just lying around in my PJs thinking and listening to music, like many Fours and Nines. Both are happy states. It's odd. Depends on what happened earlier that day; maybe on the weather. 🌍

I have so many possibilities. I can't cut myself off from any of them. I can't close myself off to just one career! Seven pushes me to explore all my options, and Four and Nine push me to dream big.

I do need a lot of alone time to process and sort out my experiences. I'm heavily influenced by my ambiance, and some soothing music and candles are usually enough to put me at peace. Furthermore, I write in a journal every day and love to reflect and reminisce on the past. That's why I started journaling in the first place-- to remember everything about my past and have stories to pass on to others.

I have a Five-ish streak, because it's what Seven integrates to. I love to learn, through new experiences and through books. I'm observant and detail-oriented—constantly developing hypotheses and plans.

I won't deceive or flatter people. Even if they don't like it, I will tell them the truth. But I'll probably sugarcoat it in a Nine-ish way.

I become infatuated very easily. I daydream a TON. Likewise, I can sit in my bed for hours and just play out stories and thoughts in my head. And, since I'm a 4, most of my declarations of passion get turned into songs or stories or journal entries with lots of exclamation points.

I feel things more intensely than most people. When I'm up, I'm UP. Being infatuated gives me much more energy than all the caffeine in the world ever could. I get HIGH on it. After something monumental-- a first kiss, meeting someone new, or something along those lines-- I will not sleep for DAYS because I just can't. If I remember correctly, the last time something like that happened, I ran down the halls, squealing, then lay in bed shaking and playing scenarios of the future in my head. I'm a cracked-out love junkie.

I'm empathetic. When I see someone who's sad, I will worry about them and try to help them. Sometimes I don't know what to do, but I'll always try. I like to do stuff for people-- on finals week at college, I made my roommates chocolate truffles because I knew they'd need something sweet. 🍫

Integration of 4-7-9 goes to 1-5-3, which makes me more grounded and logical. I get out of dreamworld a little more and exert ambition and hard work. I become more focused, self-disciplined, and hardworking, while still retaining my open-mindedness and optimism. My head's just out of the clouds and I can work on those intricate plans I've been formulating for myself.

FLAWS

When things get rough for me-- I BOLT. Instead of facing my conflict, I run off to somewhere new, somewhere potentially better. Since I'm a 4 first, I'm not impulsive enough to run off anywhere for real if it's too far out of my way. I just dream and make plans to get out at the first plausible opportunity.

4 escapes reality by going into fantasy. 7 escapes pain by going into pleasure. 9 escapes the self and conflict by repression. None of these have any inherent situation-seizing whatsoever.

I never learned about hard work paying off because I would always slide by on what I could do naturally. When something actually took a lot of work for me to learn, it was tough for me to force myself not to quit. I never tried in gym class. I wouldn't touch the steering wheel of a car for two years after I failed my driver's test. I just figured I could get by without ever having to do these things. It was all due to my dumb 4ish pride, my 7 side wishes for things to come easily, and I have a 9ish non-responsiveness in the face of problems. The 4 and 7 overrode the 9 and created a sense of impetuosity and impatience.

On a related note, I can't do anything unless I'm in the right mood for it. I'm incredibly lazy and a horrible procrastinator. But when I'm in the "feel-like-it" mood, I'm absolutely brilliant! I can do anything! And when it fades, I'm back to lying around in my pj's and watching kitty videos on YouTube. Drinking caffeine and listening to upbeat music sort of helps to get me in "work mode," but it's no comparison to natural "work mode."

I'll make all these elaborate plans, but never follow through with them. I'll lay down the framework for an elaborate novel to be fleshed out, but I'll get bored with it and move on to the next idea. It's hard to keep my interest and attention.

In my relationships, I was always one foot out the door. Any conflict meant that something wasn't lining up, and that there was probably something better for me out there. So I'd leave. I was a commitment-phobe, terrified of latching onto someone and later finding someone "better." And when I'm working out whether I want to leave someone or not, I tend to isolate a lot to think it over. I become "hot-and-cold", torn between staying and leaving. I always leave eventually.

I saw character as a kind of stagnant state. I had a couple of bad relationships and figured that people who said they were going to change usually wouldn't. So the only way to deal with these people would be to leave them. Now I wonder if I've been giving up on people too easily. A diamond in the rough is still a diamond. It just needs a little sanding and polishing.

I worry about my relationships too much. I can't stand to have people upset with me-- even when I have to reject someone or cut someone off, I will try to be as nice as possible. However, sometimes they take it the wrong way, and I wind up unintentionally leading them on. Also, when people are upset with me, I worry about them abandoning me. I can be a bit of a doormat sometimes, and I'm more easily guilt-tripped than I'd like to admit. I never quite feel like I belong, and I guess that sometimes I'm overly talkative and friendly towards everyone to overcompensate.

I have a problem with taking things personally. Sometimes things others say can really get to me, launching a lot of self-analysis and feeling flawed or broken. The worst thing that anyone can do is not take me seriously and trivialize my pain.

My Four-ish narcissism has caused me a lot of issues. It's part of my instinct to differentiate myself from others, but sometimes I let out some overtones of seeming "better" than others. I really try to contain this narcissism within my head. I'm a snob when it comes to aesthetics, whether it be in music or the arts, and compare my own work to others' a lot. Likewise, I'm realistic about where my talents lie, and if I find others to be better than me, I rationalize that I'm not working hard enough. So I channel my pride into something healthy.

I can't stand being under authority. I hate being told what to do, especially if I feel I am more competent than the person in charge. I will not kiss anyone's ass, but I won't talk back to them, either. I'll just go off and do what I feel like doing and not give a damn what they think. Again, it's my 4ish pride and 7ish rebellion talking.

I'm very Nine-ish when angry. I'm so trapped in my façade of being sweet and polite all the time that when I'm furious, I can't express it to someone's face because I hate arguing. Nor do I vilify them behind their back. I do, however, rip them apart in my angsty journal entries. I'm getting a lot better about speaking up when something doesn't feel right and working things out rather than just taking off. And even after I've taken off, I hold grudges for a while.

When I'm busy and don't want to be bothered, the talkative, energetic part of me goes out the window. I'm cold and aloof and don't want to interact with anyone. When I'm disintegrated, I'm like this all the time-- I go full misanthrope.

I'm very sensitive. When people question my decision-making or my beliefs, I feel like they don't trust me to make my own decisions. Also, when I get insulted, I will dwell on it for a while, wondering if there is anything I need to improve about myself. But I won't let others see this.

When I'm with people I'm ticked off at, there is no way I'll enjoy it. I'll go into the unhealthy Four angst-angst mode, just sitting there in sullen silence, wanting to go home and read a book or something. Sometimes, snarky, biting remarks will slip out, and this is only when I'm really comfortable with the person I'm mad at, if that makes any sense. In extreme cases, I'll avoid and ignore.

I can go into denial about my sadness. Sometimes, when I'm sad, I'll try to put it out of my mind and distract myself with things, like a Seven. I rarely let others know about my pain. I believe I have a duty to everyone I know and love to be my best self around them. Also, my Four-ish arrogance tells me that I can deal with my problems better on my own, since I'm the only one who knows the exact set of circumstances. I only talk about the tough stuff with people I REALLY trust.

I use dreaming and evasion to get through my pain and depression. Furthermore, I dream about the day when I can escape my issues literally. If someone's being a jerk, I'll dream about moving away from them and cutting off all contact forever. If classes suck, I focus on the diploma I'll receive and the cool career I'll have. If I'm lonely, I'll fantasize about meeting someone awesome at my next career or in grad school. Usually, this keeps me in check.

Unfortunately, some situations slip through the cracks. Sometimes, I DO lose hope and wonder if I'll ever find what I'm looking for out there. Sometimes, there are problems where running away won't do any good, like when Accutane made me basically go bald. That's when I go into my little Four cave of weepy horribleness and write seriously depressing stuff, waiting for the storm to pass.

Disintegration of 4-7-9 goes to 2-1-6. With the 2 in control, I become weepy and clingy. More than once I have typed out a weepy, angsty Facebook note at 4 AM to someone I care about about all the kinks and woes in our relationship, then begged for them not to leave me. The 6 means being stressed about everything and paranoid about whether people care about me or not. And the 1? I become self-righteous, stubborn, I-am-right-and-everyone-else-is-wrong, when I'm usually so open-minded. I haven't seen much of this disintegration 1, but the 2 and 6, definitely.

All in all, I can't imagine being any other tritype. As crazy as it is, I love being a 4-7-9 and wouldn't change it. I do want to become healthier. I do want to stop running from my problems and falling into passive-aggressiveness. But the open-minded spontaneity and the artistic creativity? I'll stick with that. 🤖

I figure some of you enneagram 479s, 497s, 749s, 794s, 947s, and 974s (or anyone who knows one of these) would find this helpful or resonate with this. Mainly, I wrote it as a reminder to myself about what I need to work on and what I can be proud of. If you have anything to add that resonates with you, feel free to post it in the comments section. I probably have dealt with that, too, and can add it in! 🤖

After some self-searching, I've decided I am...

For 479s, there is a need to be positive and avoid creating a negative space. The truth can be glossed over in favor of the pleasant. For a core 4, this would be the most positive 4 as 7 and 9 are both positive types and are prone to avoidance—one of painful things, the other of unpleasant things. It often results in a person that needs to be outwardly positive even if internally they do not feel it, there's a level of worry about being rejected if people see negativity, so it is hidden inside.

That said, call me a “gentle spirit” and the need to be outwardly pleasant will fade quickly. Terrible name, 479s tend to agree with the label “The Escapist”.
